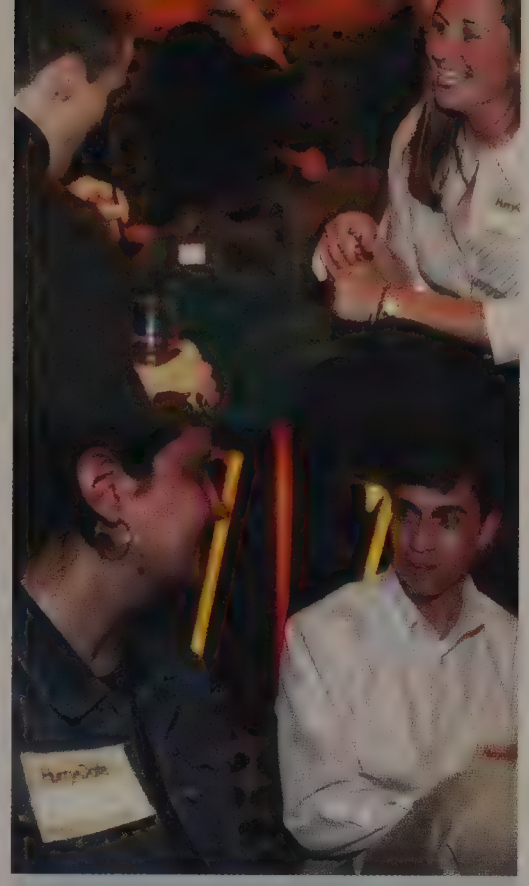
It was the people who asked interesting questions—like what my favorite color is or what's the last thing I threw out—that stood out. But one problem is that it's very easy for one person to dominate the conversation. I tried to keep my answers brief in order to get to know the other person as well. I noticed after a few dates that if I was attracted to a person, I would avoid questions about his job or where he lived. Instead, I'd focus on questions that would allow me to find out if we actually had anything in common on a more personal level.

I don't think three minutes is enough time to figure out if you'd like to see someone a second time. I saw two people that I met on HurryDate again. One was just as funny and interesting on a follow-up date as he'd been at Felt. The other one I happened to see at an eight-minute-dating event at Vox Populi the following week. I had matched with him after the Hurry Date event, but I realized after speaking with him for a few more minutes at Vox Populi that we really didn't have anything in common. I probably would have figured that out if I'd had a few more minutes at Felt.



HE SAYS

The women at HurryDate tended to be younger and more outgoing. This may have been pure coincidence, but I definitely had the most fun at this event.

Three minutes is perfect if you know right away that you're not interested—if they're too old, young, shy or whatever. Then it's nice to be able to move on. On the other hand, if you meet someone who sparks an interest, then three minutes is generally not enough time. It's difficult to determine if you click with someone or have anything in common in that short amount of time. Several times, I found myself just getting into a decent conversation with my date, only to have the HurryDate whistle blow, indicating that I had to move on. It was sometimes frustrating.

I went on one follow-up date. She was definitely as cool as she had seemed after three minutes, though more of a friend than a love connection. If I'd had more time with her, would I have discovered that sooner? I don't think so. We needed a full date to figure that out.

seven minutes

Host: JJ Productions, 12 seven-minute dates
Location: Lucy's in Brookline
Age group: 28-39

SHE SAYS

The age group that I was placed in for the evening was 28-39 years old, and I was easily the youngest woman there by several years. Most of the women were obviously dressed to impress. Also, the men were older than me by several years. They were all really nice, but I had trouble talking to many of them. After getting through all the basic questions I found that I had very little in common with any of them, and it was difficult to keep the conversations flowing.

I didn't have any interest in seeing any of the men that I met again and never even logged onto the Web site after the night of the dates. I found that seven minutes was definitely enough time to figure out if I wanted to see the person again (and in some cases, seven minutes was even too long!). The longer date really gave a good sense of what an evening with the person would be like.

HE SAYS

I was younger than most of the people at the event. This made the night less appealing. I enjoyed talking to a woman who was clearly getting tired of having the same conversations repeatedly. We ended up getting along pretty well, maybe because she made it clear that she did not want to talk about her job, where she lived, etc. I was OK with that.

There were still some painful dates in there, but I did feel like seven minutes gave me the opportunity to get to know the women a bit better than three minutes did.

eight minutes

Host: 8minuteDating.com, 12 eight-minute dates
Location: Vox Populi (Michelle) and Fire & Ice (Matt)

SHE SAYS

It seemed like a fun group of people, and everyone crowded around the bar during the breaks. In general, it was an attractive crowd, although I was not instantly taken with anyone in particular.

The eight-minute date was more informative and less tiring than the three-minute dating, but overall not as much fun. I definitely was able to learn a lot more about the people that I met, but that almost took the fun out of potentially going on a date. I matched with a few of the men and was asked out by one of them as well. I agreed to go on a date with him but then never heard from him again. I'm sure that happens all the time, but it's still a little deflating for the ego!

HE SAYS

On the surface, eight minutes sounds like it has the potential to be excruciatingly long. However, to my surprise, most of the dates were not so bad, though a couple of the dates were slightly painful. On one, I had sat down at our table first. While I waited for my female date, a man started pulling out the chair opposite me, looking as if he was going to sit down. My date then arrived and also noticed this guy, and we sort of looked at each other wondering what was going on. He ultimately kept on moving to the next table—apparently a chair was blocking his path. After my date sat down, I joked, "For a minute there, I thought I accidentally signed up for bisexual night." I thought that was pretty funny, but this woman looked at me like I was the Antichrist. Needless to say, that one didn't go so well.

I also found myself having the same conversations over and over to fill the time. "So what do you do? Where do you live? Where did you grow up? How do you like Boston? Don't you love the Duck Tours?" It also happens with three minutes, but to a lesser extent. Eight minutes definitely gives you more of an opportunity to get to know someone, albeit still on a pretty superficial level. I think that there were a few women that I decided I did not want to see again as a result of this extra time. I actually found myself wondering: If I had only had three minutes to talk to them, would I have picked them, only to find in the first five minutes of our real date that it was a big mistake?

SPEED-DATING TIPS FROM MICHELLE AND MATT

* Have a drink or two, but don't drink too much. Getting loosened up is fine, but you want to be sober enough to carry on an intelligent conversation and assess the candidates clearly.
* Be prepared with some good questions. Asking people what they do and where they live gets redundant and doesn't allow you to find out enough about them. (A caveat from Matt: "I don't believe that asking questions like 'What's your favorite color?' or 'Have you ever streaked?' allows you to learn anything more about that person. When the clock is ticking, this may be important.")
* Have a positive attitude.
* Take the event for what it is, just an opportunity to meet people. Don't expect too much.
* Don't be nervous—everyone there is doing the same thing that you are, and it really doesn't matter if you don't hit it off with a person because you'll likely never see them again.
* Consider going with a friend—this is not absolutely necessary, but it might make you feel more comfortable.

conclusion

SHE SAYS

Overall, I enjoyed the three-minute dating the most. While three minutes isn't enough time to really get to know a person, it's enough time to pique your interest and make you want to see the person again. If I ran out of conversation on the seven- or eight-minute date, I assumed that I would have nothing to say to those men on a real date. All in all, my speed-dating experience was good. I definitely met some people that I would like to remain in contact with and had fun at all of the events that I attended even though I didn't meet anyone that I want to date.

HE SAYS

I think these events are a great idea. They're an easy way to meet single women without the pressure of getting shot down (at least not face-to-face). I didn't meet the woman of my dreams, but I did make a couple of friends. I enjoyed the three-minute dating the most. This is mainly because there are more dates, which allows for a greater opportunity to meet someone. However, if I were to start a dating service, I think four or five minutes would be ideal—slightly longer than three minutes to get to know someone a bit more, but not as uncomfortable as seven or eight minutes can be. iB

Lipstick, bronzer and the right fragrance are all you need for a beauty-filled season.

BRONZERS

Getting that healthy, natural glow has never been easier.

Clockwise, from upper right: Light enough for all skin tones, Chanel's Silky Bronzing Powder, $45, is perfect all over your face for a golden pick-me-up, adding just enough sparkle. Tony & Tina's Cosmetic in Bronze, $24, adds electric gold shine to cheeks and eyelids. Nars' Casino, $26, works well for dramatic cheekbones and also doubles as an eyeshadow. You'll keep it for year-round use. By layering Clinique's Touch of Bronze, $18.50, you get extra-rich color—a must-have.

FRAGRANCES

Keep it light and simple with these five picks.

Clockwise, from lower right: For a warm, floral scent, try Clinique's Happy Heart, $48.50, or Calvin Klein's Eternity Purple Orchid, $40, which blends the heady scent of orchids with sweet plums. Also perfect for summer are two lighter versions of signature scents—Calvin Klein's Sheer Obsession (center), $50, and Chanel's subtle but intoxicating Coco Mademoiselle Eau de Toilette, $50. Another option is BCBGirls Nature, $40, which delivers a citrus-fresh, floral aroma.

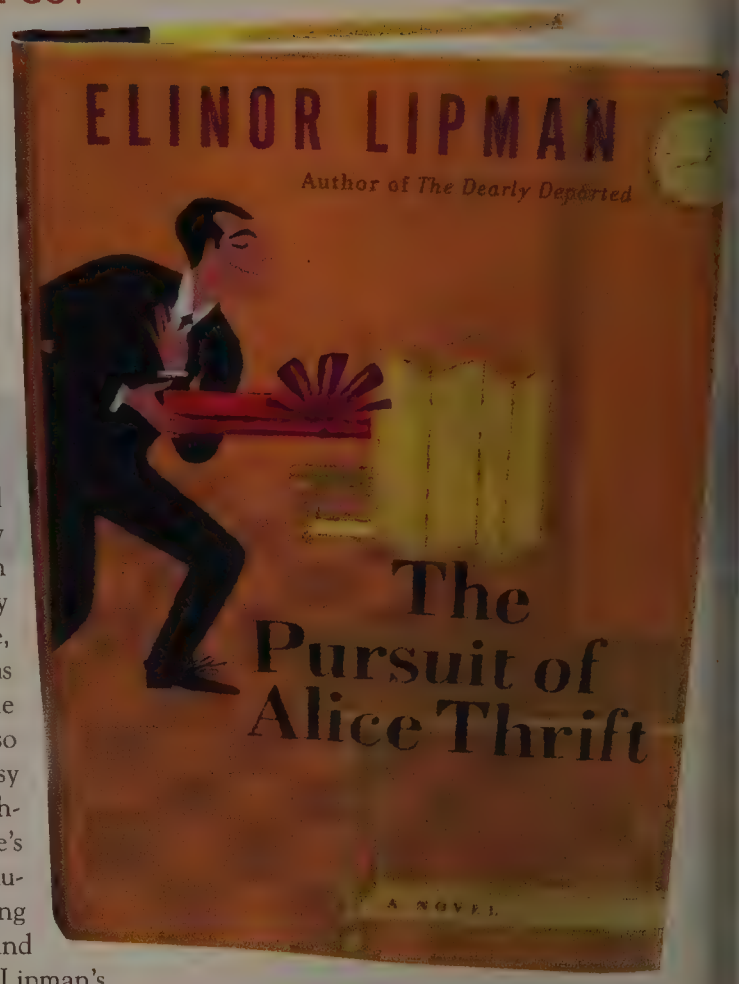
The Cambridge Center For Adult Education has a space to rent for parties and events. Call Steve Kilgore at 617-547-6789, ext. 207. $500.

As Harvard Square evolves over time, adding new shops to old flavorful ones and sometimes sadly shedding great businesses, one institution remains stalwartly eternal: that 1727 yellow house at 42 Brattle Street, home of the Cambridge Center for Adult Education. Next to the also-classic Brattle Theatre and the Casablanca restaurant, this is truly the heart of the Square. The building, with its characteristic classy quietness, is available to rent for a party; so is its up-the-street brother, the Blacksmith House. Soothingly homelike, and of course educational (about 900 people per term take courses of all kinds here), the CCAE includes a room of about 1,200 square feet. By day it's a dance studio with a mirror at one end; by night it's a pleasing party-ready space. It's intimate yet big enough for dancing, drinking, milling around, or, if you're in the mood, getting married. With pretty rooms all around, it's much cozier than any impersonal flourescent-lit "function room." Here, you can imagine you're partying down among the patriots who occupied the place during the Revolutionary War, throwing out the Tory William Brattle. George Washington also had his military headquarters right down the street.

THE DOC AND THE FUDGE GUY

Elinor Lipman's newest funny book, The Pursuit of Alice Thrift, is about a socially awkward woman surgeon and the men in her life.



Here's a recipe for romance: take an overly earnest female doctor, a self-proclaimed social misfit, and add a nose-job-seeking guy named Ray. The fact that he's a fudge salesman perfectly encapsulates his foolishly comic self. Dr. Alice Thrift, a struggling surgery intern, with a name that suggests restraint and rectitude, is highlighted as his opposite. Starry-eyed and always deferring to her as "Doc," Ray makes a concerted play for this paragon of introversion, who is lovable precisely because she thinks that she's not. Alice, fated to attract complementary pals, has Leo, a wonderful, sensitive, voluble male nurse, as her best friend. She also develops Sylvie, a bold, almost brassy doctor, as another confidant. The laugh-out-loud tale of Ray's search for Alice's wary heart and hand is surprisingly plausible, not just a campy sketch. Along with her signature snappy dialogue and lavish delivery of delicious details, Lipman's other gift is her ability to develop more serious themes. How do people of different "stations" balance their very dissimilar strengths (nerdy doc; chatty salesman) to forge a strong relationship? And what are the deeper marvels of friendship (Leo and Sylvie) that can sometimes supersede love and romance?

WICKER GOOD FURNITURE

The Wicker Lady, at 925 Webster Street in Needham, sells wicker furniture in several colors, including white, honey and blue. It has fancy indoor mahogany pieces and offers interior design services too. Call 781-449-1172.

Something about wicker just cries out Porch! Summer! Iced Tea! And whereas those sunshine-and-leisure vibes are wicker's famous earmarks, you can also move that spirit indoors for year-round easiness-of-chair. The Wicker Lady shows its wares in appealing little groupings that display wicker's versatility. In its classic white form, you can settle down into a lounge chair with a flat back and nice flat armrests for reading, or rock and roll in a rocker, swishing your lemonade. One of the coziest looks is the roundish, petite bistro chair, extra-beautiful in blue. The many cheery fabrics here bring floweriness, or gingham, or blue stripes to the innate optimism of the wicker. In sofa or loveseat form, these pieces range from poolside-informal to an almost British Empire formality, especially those in brown or honey. The mottled-glass coffee table has that party-by-the-pool feeling, but a larger version with a round glass top can be your kitchen or dining room table, pouring a bit of June into February. For absolutely no maintenance, some pieces are made of vinyl with aluminum frames. Upstairs you'll find complementary indoor glamour, in sleek reproductions of 18th-century mahogany tables, chairs and chests.

ASIA (NOT SO) MINOR

Peking Tom's does egg foo yung one better, offering gourmet Pan-Asian cuisine in an upscale setting

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

Peking Tom's will change the way you think about Chinese restaurants. Gone are the Formica tables, the egg foo yung and chow mein, the paper napkins and the fortune cookies. Enter high design, sleek, substantial tableware and a plenitude of attentive servers attired in blue and black. This is not Peking, but Shanghai, the face of the 21st century, the Asian century.

Owner Michael Conlon of 21st Amendment, the Paramount and the Blarney Stone, and chef Marc Orfaly of Pigalle in the Theater District, have transformed an old Irish watering hole on Kingston Street near Downtown Crossing into an upscale Pan-Asian eatery. The extravagance and style of its design and decor are equaled by the inventive, well-executed creations of its kitchen. The menu is divided into seven categories: raw bar, small plates, dim sum, wok, large plates, vegetables/side and dessert. The raw bar offers a range of seafood, beginning with oysters on the half shell and clams ceviche and concluding with a sushi platter. I tried the tuna rolls ($15) and found them exquisite but, alas, exquisitely expensive as well. Five tiny cylinders of excellent raw tuna encased in crisp wrappers, these minuscule treats were extraordinarily good, but at $3 each, I expected no less.

Peking Tom's small plates were more reasonably priced. Five small skewers of beef teriyaki ($5) brought tender morsels of beef with a rich peanut sauce for dipping. Vietnamese summer rolls ($4.50) yielded four delicate bundles of vegetables including carrots, tomatoes and sprightly mint leaves wrapped in gossamer-thin rice noodles, accompanied by a dipping sauce of mild vinegar and scallions. Shrimp two ways ($7) consisted of four medium-sized, perfectly textured shrimp with a complex aioli sauce, paired with another four shrimp with an orange, sweet and sour sauce. Finally among the small plates was the shrimp-pork pad Thai, a combination of al dente, linguine-like noodles with shards of pork and small shrimp in a mild sesame sauce. Far different from conventional pad Thai, the noodles were not sticky, and the sauce not cloying but subtly sweet.

Dim sum included five hefty shrimp shumai ($6), dumplings filled with chopped shrimp, scallions, and fresh ginger wrapped in soft wheat pasta, served in a covered bamboo steamer. The wok dishes, as the name implies, were stir-fries, and the pork and pineapple fried rice ($12) turned out to be my least favorite choice, with thin, lackluster strips of pork and traces of chopped pineapple. On the other hand, the rib-eye beef chow foon ($16) resembled chow foon from more conventional Chinese restaurants, but the beef was more succulent, and the noodles even broader, thicker and more velvety and luscious than is usually the case. An accompaniment of sautéed greens, redolent of garlic, made this the most hardy dish we tried.

The best of the large plates was the crispy duck with plum sauce and mu shu pancakes ($17). The Peking in the title of the restaurant could well come from this preparation, in essence Peking duck, with crispy, pleasantly salty skin, moist tender flesh, and an accompaniment of pancakes, hoisin sauce, scallions and cucumbers. Vegetable dishes included Szechuan green beans with toasted almonds ($4), a generous portion of thick, spicy, al dente green beans that provided an herbaceous counterpoint to the meaty short ribs and rich duck. Least impressive among the large plates was the crackling pig ($18), which the menu and our waitress suggested would feature crackling, crispy skin. Instead, what arrived were soft soggy shards of pork compressed into a cylinder and steamed to a tender and flavorful, but unfortunately texture-less, mass. Finally, steamed pea pod leaves ($4) turned out to be a marvelous warm salad of resilient leaves dressed in a mild sesame sauce.

As the end of our meal approached, my youngest son asked whether the dessert was likely to be the perfunctory small plate of orange sections or pineapple chunks followed by fortune cookies. We were blown away when our waitress distributed the dessert menu, which listed an impressive assortment of entremets, each priced at $6, a bargain compared with the price of dessert in most upscale Boston restaurants. Panna cotta with fresh fruit consisted of three large slices of creamy custard. While the fruit garnish resembled ordinary fruit cocktail, the resulting combination turned out to be quite pleasant, the sweetness of the fruit complementing the more restrained mellifluousness of the pudding. Ginger-lemongrass crème brûlee combined the subtle yet distinctive flavors of ginger and lemongrass in an interesting, mildly citric and spicy herb that seasons so many Vietnamese dishes. Our only complaint was that it was too small. Finally, a chocolate and almond Florentine with cherry sauce combined crunchy nuts and dark, rich chocolate in a confection designed to appeal to the "if it's not chocolate, it's not dessert" crowd.

Peking Tom's is a nightspot, a watering hole as much as a restaurant, and it is divided into two parts. The Dragon Room, so named for a large dragon stenciled on the wall, includes an elegant, long bar that seats 20 patrons on black wooden stools and a lounge area with upholstered chairs and a large window looking out onto Kingston Street. Farther inside the restaurant is the Buddha Room, named for the white Buddha statue reclining over a smaller bar that seats 10. Banquettes with a plethora of tufted pillows line the periphery of the Buddha Room

Peking Tom's pu pu platter includes orange-tamarind pork spareribs, crab Rangoon, fancy chicken wings, pork spring rolls and beef teriyaki skewers.

Happy and Not-so-Happy Returns!

Bravo, Bricco!...Can't-Cope Café... Far from "Haven"?

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Seeing a restaurateur take a second—or third—shot at running a restaurant reminds me of the disclaimer tagged onto on all those mutual funds ads: "Past performance is no indicator of future profitability." You may have heard that the dynamic Italian duo of Rita D'Angelo and Marisa Iocco, who elicited rave reviews and a fiercely loyal following at Galleria Italiana, are back in town after an extended sojourn in Italy. You may know that they are running the front and back of the house at Bricco in the North End. What you truly need to know is that the diminutive Marisa, in her dramatic black chef's coat, is turning out an astonishing range of utterly inspired, wonderfully imaginative, and transcendently delicious dishes. And if you think I'm overstating the case, you haven't tried the crispy jumbo softshell crab in a golden tempura-like batter golden with saffron, so sweetly perfect that one bite brought back memories I didn't even know I had. Then there's the voluptuous housemade ravioli with foie gras, parmesan and artichokes, which will make you giddy without a single glass of prosecco. Not to mention the classic, beloved bread pudding that you can enjoy with a leisurely espresso after your meal, instead of seeking dessert elsewhere. And there is free valet parking. Welcome back, ladies!

Marisa Iocco (left) and Rita D'Angelo have taken over the kitchen at Bricco with great success.

On the other hand, there's the Copacafé in Lexington. George Howell, who founded the Coffee Connection in Cambridge (where the menu exhorted diners to ask their "waitron" about dessert) teamed up with Henry Patterson, the brains behind the former Cambridge-based Bel Canto chain that helped popularize funky pizza; pastry chef Vicki Lee Boyajian; and John Mascia, who'd been involved with a series of local eateries in varied managerial roles. Ambitiously positioned as the ne plus ultra of coffeehouses, a pastry café in the grand European manner that would serve a menu of stylish small plates, the Copacafé opened to great fanfare several months ago. From the start, though, its reach has exceeded its grasp, as the leadership's team spirit was apparently less than copacetic. Patterson was the first to go. By the time you read this, Mascia will be gone. And so will Boyajian, who characterized her imminent departure as a "mutual" decision.

"I got them started, and I'm proud of the quality," she says. "I hope to launch a new venture."

Under what name, now that she has sold the rights to her eponymous Needham-based chain of bakeries? The Pastry Chef Formerly Known as Vicki Lee Boyajian?

"That's a bummer," she laughs, but she's confident about her future. And she's not crying over spilled mocha for the Copacafe's future, either. "Hopefully, they'll bring in a great manager," she says. We'll see how the cookie crumbles.

SECOND COURSE

Ed Doyle update: Aura's former chef is still cagey about details of his upcoming restaurant, but promises in an e-mail that "the location and the opportunity will be well worth the wait." One thing we do know: the new venture will be called Haven. Nice name in these insecure times...Le Meridien has promoted Daniel Kenney to the position of executive chef. Formerly executive sous chef, Kenney fills the shoes of former executive chef Mark Sapienza, who left Le Meridien to cook at the Bay Tower...At the Independent in Somerville, chef Mark Usewicz has hired new sous chef Paul Oberhauser. iB

THROUGHOUT THE SUMMER

Performing Arts: Theater Under the Stars

Now that the weather's finally shaped up, it seems that people will leap at any chance to be outdoors, judging from the two-hour wait for patio seating at local restaurants and the crowds of people swarming the banks of the Charles River every evening. For a little culture with your fresh air, why not add theater under the stars to your summer to do list? The single biggest production is put on by the Commonwealth Shakespeare Company, and this year's show, Macbeth, plays on the Boston Common July 18-Aug. 10. There's no better place to watch Shakespeare's classic tale of smoldering sexuality and unspeakable treachery. Then there's Twelfth Night (July 10-Sept. 14) and A Midsummer Night's Dream (through Aug. 31)—both playing at the Publick Theatre—and TheatreZone's Lorca in the Park: Blood Wedding, playing July 11-19 at Chelsea's Mary O'Malley Park. And finally, there's The Winter's Tale, performed by the Industrial Theatre on the steps of Memorial Church in Harvard Square July 18. Get ye out of doors! See Performing Arts on page 50 for more information.

Comedy: Hamburger Helper

Neil Hamburger is the comedian to see if you can't stand stand-up comedians. He's the antidote to typical one-liners like "Take my wife—please!" and "I just flew in from Chicago, and boy are my arms tired!" Instead, Hamburger rambles through interminable monologues that are funny because they're so pointless. Answer-less riddles and jokes with no punch lines (and sometimes no endings at all) are his bread and butter, and his sad-sack delivery accentuates the awkwardness of telling truly bad jokes. But you'll still laugh, despite yourself. Also performing: blues-rock band Canned Hamm. T.T. the Bear's Place, 10 Brookline St., Cambridge (617-492-2327). 7:15 pm, $8.

NOW SHOWING

Movies: Alphabetize Your Entertainment

This month, the Harvard Film Archive's summer program, Cinema A–Z, pays homage to art-house classics with an alphabetized roster of cinematic treasures. The series of double-feature screenings takes place throughout the month with themes like E is for Exploitation (Beyond the Valley of the Dolls and Possession) and W is for Women's Pictures (George Cukor's The Women and Pedro Almodóvar's Women on the Verge of a Nervous Breakdown). Fans of the new zombie-dominated release 28 Days Later should check out the HFA's series finale, Z is for Zombies night, which resurrects the classics Night of the Living Dead and I Walked with a Zombie. We're especially excited to see O Is for Oracles July 22. At 7 pm the 1940 film The Thief of Baghdad (above) screens, followed at 9 pm by the 1977 Australian thriller The Last Wave, directed by Peter Weir. One $7 ticket gets you in to both features. 24 Quincy St., Cambridge (617-495-4700).

Tastings: Celebrate American Beer Month

If you've already taken tours of the Sam Adams and Harpoon breweries a dozen times, and you feel like you've "done" all the brew pubs in Boston, maybe it's time to expand your suds-soaked horizons. BeerAdvocate.com, "a beer site dedicated to people who love beer, built by people who love beer," is sponsoring an all-day bus trip to breweries, brew pubs and bars in Western Massachusetts July 12. The tour starts at Watch City Brewing Co. in Waltham at 9:30 am and then proceeds to Paper City Brewery Co. in Holyoke for a brewery tour (with samples!) and Amherst Brewing Co. in Amherst for lunch and a tour. In the afternoon, the bus makes stops at Berkshire Brewing Co. in South Deerfield, and Maplewood Farms Brewery & Restaurant and the Moan and Dove bar, both in Amherst, and then heads back to Watch City for dinner at 8:30 pm. After this 12-hour beer bash, you may want to take the advice of the two friendly guys who founded BeerAdvocate.com, Jason and Todd Alström, and pass out…er, spend the night…in Waltham. The founders will suggest places to stay. Meet at Watch City Brewing Co., 256 Moody St., Waltham. www.beeradvocate.com. $85.

Art: They Got the Beat

For the past 17 years, Davis Square has played host to ArtBeat, a showcase of Somerville's abundant cultural offerings. This year, the artsy festival take up two full days with heaps of arts-related activities. There's a film festival at Seven Hills Park and the Somerville Theater, along with more live bands than you could see in a week at the clubs: Brazilian music by Bande Ponte; Haitian music by Chita-sou-do'm; pop by Apollo Sunshine and Kay Hanley; and many more. Dance events include Tibetan acts and a show by the Snappy Dance Theater. For theater buffs, there are shows at Jimmy Tingle's Off Broadway (including performances by Luna Puppet Theatre and Rough & Tumble Theatre) and the Class Act political satire at Elm Street Plaza. There are also performances by children's theater groups, performance art and art installations. If you're still standing after all of that, you can whoop it up at the Pajama Soul Party July 19, replete with go-go dancers ($5, or $3 if you wear pajamas.) It's hosted by DJ Miss Firecracker and takes place at the Davis Square VFW. 371 Summer Street, 9 pm to 1 am, 21+. www.somerville artscouncil.org. (617-625-6600).

Come Sail Away

Slip on your boat shoes and prepare to tack to and fro at the Boston Sailing Center's open house

The Boston Sailing Center explores the harbor July 19.

Sailing never looks easy. Even the people helming those little two-sail jobbies that infest the Charles each summer are usually leaning and trimming and ducking booms like they're auditioning for the America's Cup. Those who graduate to a bigger boat and the open sea have to learn about navigation, right-of-way, shoals, weather-watching, pirates....All of that could be off-putting to the novice who is interested in taking up sailing. Fortunately, the Boston Sailing Center, a sailing school based in a converted Louisiana riverboat docked at Lewis Wharf, annually offers an open house that gives novices a chance to get out on the water and satisfy some of their curiosity about nautical activities.

The sails are hoisted July 19 from 1-6 pm. Experienced skippers will helm boats ranging from 23 to 40 feet on trips around Boston Harbor. Sailing Center staff will be aboard to answer questions. So by the time you return, you should know your port from your starboard, your bilge from your bow and your head from your rudder. Even if you're a confirmed landlubber, it's a free day on the water. And refreshments will be served. Ahoy.

The two revolutionary artists draw a connection between unconventional love and creative inspiration through their letters.

The Winter's Tale
The Industrial Theatre, Memorial Church, Harvard University, Cambridge (617-495-9878). MBTA: Red Line to Harvard. July 18, 6:30 pm. Free. Industrial Theatre presents an open-air performance of Shakespeare's comedy on the steps of Memorial Church.

NOW RUNNING

Blue Man Group
Charles Playhouse, 74 Warrenton St., Boston (617-426-6912). MBTA: Green Line to Boylston. Wed., 8 pm; Thu., 5 and 8 pm; Fri., 7 and 10 pm; Sat., 4, 7 and 10 pm; Sun., 3 and 6 pm. Ongoing. $43 and $53. There's no dialogue, but somehow this multimedia production manages to make an impact with tribal rock music, humorous antics, props and three men painted blue.

Cats
North Shore Music Theatre, 62 Dunham Rd., Beverly (617-232-7200). www.nsmt.org. Tue.-Fri., 8 pm; Sat., 2 pm and 8 pm; Sun., 2 pm. Through Aug. 3. $19-$53. Andrew Lloyd Webber's world of junkyard cats comes to the Boston area. Based on T.S. Eliot's Book of Practical Cats, this musical features such numbers as "Mr. Mistoffelees" and "Memory."

Fly-Bottle
Spring Lawn Theater, Shakespeare & Company, 70 Kemble St., Lenox (413-637-1199). Through Aug. 24. $27-$42. David Egan's play examines the famed "poker incident" between renowned philosophers Ludwig Wittgenstein and Karl Popper at the Moral Science Club in England in October 1946. The two are said to have engaged in a heated exchange that culminated in Wittgenstein gesturing with (some say brandishing) a poker that hung by the fireplace.

George Gershwin Alone
American Repertory Theatre, 64 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-547-8300). www.amrep.org. MBTA: Red Line to Harvard. Tue.-Wed., 7:30 pm; Sat., 2 and 8 pm; Sun., 2 and 7:30 pm. Through July 26. $27-$45. Hershey Felder's one-man musical is the biographical story of legendary composer George Gershwin. The play is based on interviews with the composer's family and friends, plus correspondence and manuscripts.

The Great Gorgonzola & His New Assistant
Actors Workshop, 327 Summer St., Studio 4, Boston (617-931-2000). Fri.-Mon., 7 pm. Ongoing. $27. In this black comedy written and performed by Donato Colucci, the Great Gorgonzola is a has-been magician, plagued by his spotlight-hungry, incompetent assistant. He loses his mind during a performance, and only authentic supernatural powers and his dark past can save his show.

Jacques Brel Is Alive and Well and Living in Paris
Gloucester Stage Company, 267 East Main St., Gloucester (978-281-4433). Wed.-Sat., 8 pm; Sun., 5 pm. Through July 13. $30. This evening of song is based on Jacques Brel's lyrics and commentary, accompanied by his music. The performance features classics by the Belgian composer, including Carousel, Marathon and If We Only Have Love.

A Midsummer Night's Dream
Publick Theatre, Christian Herter Riverside Park, 1400 Soldiers Field Rd., Brighton (617-782-5425). www.publicktheatre.org. MBTA: Red Line to Harvard. Every other week, through Aug. 31. Wed., Thu., and Sun., 7:30 pm; Fri. and Sat., 8 pm. $30. The Publick Theatre presents Shakespeare's comedy about four lovers, a fairy queen and an ass.

Much Ado About Nothing
Founders' Theatre, Shakespeare & Company, 70 Kemble St., Lenox (413-637-3353). www.shakespeare.org. Through August 31. $27-$38. Shakespeare's classic comedic tale of feuding lovers Beatrice and Benedict involves passion, deception, honor and revenge in Messina, Italy.

The Producers
The Colonial Theatre, 106 Boylston St., Boston (617-426-9366). MBTA: Green Line to Boylston. Tue.-Fri., 8 pm; Sat.-Sun., 2 and 8 pm. Extended through September 13. $87-$97. Charlie's Angels: Full Throttle runs on empty

BY PAUL SHERMAN

When is a pop-culture spoof so void of original content that it practically ceases to exist? When it's the disappointing sequel Charlie's Angels: Full Throttle.

How could the sequel to such a fun and stylish movie be such a drag? The first movie took the cheesy 1970s TV series about dishy crimefighters and crammed it with unexpected doses of in-your-face comedy and over-the-top action. Few movies were so joyous and liberating. But except for a few scattered moments, the joy is now drudgery. The rehashes from the original aren't so amusing the second time around, and the sequel's plot is a loser.

Drew Barrymore, Cameron Diaz and Lucy Liu reunite for Charlie's Angels: Full Throttle.

Where the first movie was assured, the sequel is desperate. You sense that from the very start. Why else does Full Throttle include another "once upon a time there were three girls" voice-over from Charlie (voiced by John Forsyth, as always)? The voice-over comes complete with a montage nutshelling the childhoods and exploits of Angels Natalie (Cameron Diaz), Dylan (Drew Barrymore) and Alex (Lucy Liu). Hey, didn't we do this already?

Full Throttle is full of indulgences like that. Sometimes its primary function seems to be to cram in celebrity cameos (Bruce Willis, Pink, Eve, the Olsen Twins, Jaclyn Smith, etc.), and when it has its obligatory reprise of klutzy-but-forever-triumphant Natalie's dancing, this time it's a group dance in which all three Angels mimic MC Hammer's "U Can't Touch This" choreography as the video plays on a nearby TV. Practically everything in this movies serves only to comment on an earlier piece of pop culture.

The plot is the one possible exception, but that immediately poops out. I can't even remember the case the Angels tackled in the first movie, but it couldn't have been as instantly forgettable as the sequel's yarn about two rings encoded with the real identities of those in the witness protection program. New characters after the ring include a U.S. Marshals higher-up (Robert Patrick), an Irish hooligan (Justin Theroux) and Madison Lee (Demi Moore), an ex-Angel gone bad, and they're all washouts.

We're supposed to care about this plot because, it turns out, Barrymore's Dylan is in the witness protection program. She once was the hooligan's girlfriend, but then she testified against him and now he's out of jail and looking for revenge. But the hooligan is a pathetic noncharacter. When we first see him, he's shot just like Robert DeNiro's Max Cady in the Cape Fear remake—same upside-down exercising, similar tattooed body, same music. When we see him again, we get the Cape Fear music again. Who wrote this stuff? Someone with short-term memory loss?

Moore's big comeback is small potatoes, too. It's supposed to be a big deal that Madison is an ex-Angel, but it's not as if she were in the first movie as a good guy and then went bad. We have no emotional investment in the character, and Moore plays her as a cardboard villain. Her stiletto heels have more personality than Madison does.

With lead characters who aren't quite as ingratiating as they used to be, dull villains and hit-or-miss subplots, Full Throttle becomes little more than a series of over-eager, special-effects-heavy action sequences that get tired very quickly. These include a motorcycle race that's more confusing than the fight scenes in Gladiator (is that possible?), showdowns on a boat and on a rooftop and more close shaves than a Gillette commercial.

There are a few saving graces to Full Throttle. As the new Bosley, Bernie Mac is the funniest thing in the movie, and the unsinkable Diaz continues to be fearless, her most amusing moments here being when she sports a lesbian mullet and when she births a calf. John Cleese also contributes a chuckle or two as Alex's uninformed dad.

All in all, though, Charlie's Angels: Full Throttle is a lot like the famous scene in This Is Spinal Tap in which lead guitarist Nigel Tufnel shows off amplifiers that have knobs that crank all the way up to 11. When asked if it's louder than any other amp, he repeatedly replies, "It goes to 11." Full Throttle is cranked to 11 too, but just as clueless. iB

Charlie's Angels: Full Throttle ★★

Directed by McG. Written by John August, Cormac Wibberley and Marianne Wibberley. With Cameron Diaz, Drew Barrymore, Lucy Liu, Demi Moore, Bernie Mac, Crispin Glover, Justin Theroux and Robert Patrick. Rated PG-13. Columbia Pictures.

New Releases

Bend It Like Beckham ★★½
The feisty young woman caught between two cultures—think Double Happiness, Mississippi Masala and My Big Fat Greek Wedding—gets trotted out yet again in director Gurinder Chadha's latest, which can't compare to her Bhaji on the Beach but is still involving. Parminder Nagra gives a winning performance as Jess, the Indian-English teen with soccer skills and two Sikh parents who won't allow her to pursue such a nontraditional female endeavor. When Jess is recruited to play for a local women's team, with the possibility of discovery by an American pro team, the scene is set for lots of running around behind her parents' back and comic mishaps—in fact, an awful lot of repetitive running around and mishaps. It's all pretty predictable, but Nagra, Anupam Kher (as the heroine's father) and Keira Knightley (as her teammate and sometime rival), as well as Chadha's sense of compassion, help dignity fight caricature to a standoff. (At Copley Place, Kendall Square and suburbs.)

Bruce Almighty ★★
The Majestic was a terrible movie that deserved to flop, but it hurts to see Jim Carrey retreat back into physical comedy with this painfully broad movie about a guy who's ticked off about his accursed, unlucky life until God (Morgan Freeman) lets him take the world's reins for a week to see if he can do any better. Despite a few amusing moments, Carrey's latest is as unconvincingly feel-good as The Majestic was. The premise is just a clumsy excuse for his character to discover, à la Jimmy Stewart in It's a Wonderful Life, that he didn't have it so bad after all. And don't the Hollywood studios have anything better for Jennifer Aniston than the girlfriend role she's stuck with here? (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Capturing the Friedmans ★★★★
Has a movie ever plunged the viewer into greater moral ambiguity than Andrew Jarecki's documentary about the Friedman family of Great Neck, Long Island? They splintered apart in the late 1980s, when father Arnold and youngest son Jesse were accused of molesting Arnold's computer students. On one hand, it's easy to see how the two Friedmans, and Arnold in particular, might be guilty: He first got into trouble for possessing child porn, and he confessed to having improper relations with minors at other times in his life. On the other hand, the police's investigation and the testimony that investigators got from the kids are both very suspect. It's impossible to believe the Friedmans are totally in the wrong, or totally right in their denials. You have to believe the truth is somewhere in the middle. So is the movie a cautionary tale about evil lurking beneath an everyday suburban surface or about the power of suggestion and the abuse of power? It's both. (At Copley Place, Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Dumb & Dumberer: When Harry Met Lloyd ★
Loser! This unfunny prequel to the funny Jim Carrey hit really has no reason for being. Carrey and Jeff Daniels are not in this story of how their characters became friends back in high school (just their hairstyles are), and original writer-directors Peter and Bobby Farrelly had nothing to do with the movie. Instead, it's just a generic high school comedy with some bad slapstick. It even wastes Eugene Levy as the evil principal. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Finding Nemo ★★★
The latest computer-animated comedy from Pixar doesn't stray very far from the quest plots of the Toy Story movies and A Bug's Life, but it's a return to form after the weak Monsters, Inc. The digital animation continues to get more expressive, and human characters are again wisely kept to a minimum. This story of a fish trying to find his son, who was grabbed by a scuba diver, features equally expressive work from the voice cast, especially Albert Brooks as the overprotective father and Ellen DeGeneres as the forgetful fish who helps him on his quest. The amusing, but little-seen, early Pixar short "Knick Knacks" precedes the film. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Hollywood Homicide ★★
Writer-director Ron Shelton's mix of comedy, drama, sex, philosophy and male bonding has often worked—just recall Bull Durham and White Men Can't Jump. But here they're like pieces of a jigsaw puzzle that aren't that interesting and don't really go together. An investigation into a quadruple homicide and Shelton's typically jocular humor don't exactly commingle, to use a word the movie likes, and Shelton is so busy stressing the fact that Harrison Ford's and Josh Hartnett's characters would rather be moonlighting as, respectively, a realtor and a yoga instructor, that they're not very believable as detectives. Semi-competent and totally mediocre. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Hulk ★★½

Traumatic Childhood + Weird Science = Troubled Oddball Hero. That's the all-too-familiar comic book formula at work, as in Batman, Spider-Man and Daredevil. But Ang Lee's movie gets the set-up right, with Eric Bana as scientist Bruce Banner, who has no idea that his birth father (Nick Nolte), also a scientist, passed on the mutation he induced in himself. Of course, all the physicality of the plot—after being juiced with gamma rays, DNA-mutant Bruce turns into the Hulk whenever he gets angry—is just a stand-in for the emotional baggage parents pass on to children. The movie's snappy editing, which is full of split-screens, nifty wipes and dissolves, also adds energy. Yet as the lengthy story moves along, and we get more Hulk and less Bruce, the characters and the drama recede and the special effects and large-scale action take over. Like its title character, the movie gets a little too big for its britches. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Italian Job ★★

Big car chases are no camouflage for shoddy writing in this underachieving remake of a 1969 heist movie. The characters are all amazingly vague in this story of a gang of thieves (including Mark Wahlberg, Charlize Theron and Mos Def) that plots revenge after one of them makes off with the spoils of a Venice robbery. The story awkwardly maneuvers itself into the situation of the British original when a cache of gold is heisted from an armored car by using a fleet of stripped-down, souped-up Mini-Coopers. But the cool Minis overshadow the people this time. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Matrix Reloaded ★★½

This spotty sequel to 1999's pop-culture touchstone holds true to the theory that the middle movie is usually the weakest of a trilogy (that's assuming this fall's third movie is better). Where the first was intimate and tightly constructed, the new movie is less specific in its internal logic and has a large scale that is sometimes clumsy (including council meetings and war talk reminiscent of, yikes, The Phantom Menace). The sequel seems even more like a videogame than the first, in its increasingly elaborate, animation-dependent fight scenes (which come off as self-parody at times) and in the "leveled" structure (fight to see the Oracle, move up to fight to see the Keymaker, move up to fight your way into the Source, etc.). The heavies have all the fun this time, including Hugo Weaving's Agent Smith, who can now replicate himself at will, and the snippy Frenchman played by Lambert Wilson. Not bad, but not as satisfying as hoped. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

A Mighty Wind ★★★½

In Christopher Guest's latest improvised mockumentary, following Waiting for Guffman and Best in Show, Eugene Levy and Catherine O'Hara dominate as a one-time folk duo and romantic couple that reunites for a memorial concert with two other groups. As the fallen folk idol who's had a rough three decades since, Levy is hilariously zonked out, but he and O'Hara sing so well together that their scenes are also disarmingly sweet and touching. Guest and his This Is Spinal Tap cohorts Michael McKean and Harry Shearer also score together as the Folksmen, though the three characters are underdeveloped as individuals. Meanwhile, like always, Fred Willard nearly steals the show. (At Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

Spellbound ★★★½

Jeffrey Blitz's documentary follows eight junior high schoolers with a magnificent obsession: they're all contestants in the 1999 National Spelling Bee. The movie takes them from their regionals through the Washington, D.C., finals, and it has quirky charm to spare. The kids make up an impressively broad cross section—boys and girls, city and country, white and of color—and the Bee really brings their families together and lets these smart kids, often misfits back in their hometowns, bond with others like themselves. The finals also generate more dramatic tension than any other movie this year, by far. (At Copley Place, Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Swimming Pool ★★½

French writer-director Francois Ozon has made somber movies like Under the Sand and playful movies like 8 Women. His English-language debut seems like an attempt to blend both types, by pairing the first's Charlotte Rampling and the second's Ludivine Sagnier. Rampling plays a dowdy English mystery writer whose publisher (Charles Dance) offers her his home in the south of France for a writing holiday. The unexpected arrival of the publisher's horny French daughter (Sagnier) spoils the working vacation, but it sure livens up the movie. Sagnier's devil-may-care sensuality is a helluva lot more fun than the slow Rampling prologue, and the two women embark on a passive-aggressive cat-and-mouse game. The payoff is way too subtle and puzzling to deliver the needed oomph, though, and the movie remains mostly a showcase for Sagnier's devilish performance. (At Kendall Square.)

2 Fast 2 Furious ★★

Without the original's Vin Diesel (the Steven Seagal of the new millennium), the sequel isn't quite as obnoxious as the original. But it is almost as dumb. Once again, everyone acts like they're extras in a music video—which, considering how the street races are edited to music, isn't entirely incorrect. This just might be the world's most expensive pissing contest, and the "Look at me! Look at my car!" desperation of most of the characters is downright silly. The plot involves Paul Walker (whose character is now an ex-cop) and Tyrese going undercover to take down a drug smuggler (Cole Hauser), and still managing to indulge in enough male bonding for three movies (gee, who's on whose tail in this race?). The movie achieves its goal of throwing in one of those races every 15 minutes, but I'll take a grade-Z hot-rod movie over this one's product-placement, soundtrack-deal, MTV slickness any day. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

28 Days Later ★★★

Trainspotting director Danny Boyle's apocalyptic sci-fi/action film owes a lot to those of George Romero, especially Dawn of the Dead. Still, it's a creepy and lively blend of character drama, zombie film, social commentary, vampire film and action, set in motion when a group of animal-rights activists frees rage-infected lab primates. The animals violently attack and infect the activists, who attack other humans and so on, until nearly all of England (and perhaps the world) is acting like bloodthirsty soccer hooligans. The movie follows Jim (Cillian Murphy), who awakens from a coma into this new world. He meets up with the few uninfected people left, and they try to find any remaining vestige of society and stay alive. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Audio Addiction

Tom Morello and Dave Navarro trade guitar licks that levitate the diverse world of Lollapalooza

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Dave Navarro and Tom Morello are longtime comrades from the Hollywood rock underground. The two guitarists first met in the mid-1980s, when Navarro was bringing psychedelic finesse to the arty rush of metal, punk and funk that became Jane's Addiction. Then Morello broke new sonic ground on guitar, first with Rage Against the Machine, and now Audioslave.

Now they're fueling their respective supergroups on the reborn Lollapalooza festival, which rolls into the Tweeter Center July 25 with a lineup that also includes Incubus, Queens of the Stone Age, Jurassic 5 and the Donnas.

Jane's launched Lollapalooza in 1991, bringing together alternative rock and rap acts long before those genres became a stale hybrid. Lollapalooza redefined the summer package tour during its seven-year reign—bands that played to big crowds for the first time at Lollapalooza included Rage, Soundgarden (whose singer, Chris Cornell, now fronts Audioslave), Pearl Jam, Nine Inch Nails, Tool, the Red Hot Chili Peppers and Smashing Pumpkins.

"That's some of the best music of the '90s," says Morello, who gained exposure, literally, at Lollapalooza when Rage began their performance standing naked with mouths taped in a censorship protest. ("I can't promise a repeat performance," he says.)

"Now is the perfect time for Lollapalooza to be back," says Morello, "because of the dire straits that music is in."

Adds Navarro, "What is spectacular about our tour is the diversity, which the original Lollapaloozas were all about. It wasn't just a rock show for a particular genre."

"It's the kind of thing you want to be at, even if you don't like music," Navarro says of the Xbox-sponsored tour, which will feature interactive games with plasma screens for text messaging. "And if you like music, the music's incredible."

On its third tour since the volatile group broke up after Lollapalooza '91, Jane's is supporting its first studio CD since 1990. Out July 22, Strays rocks extra hard, but also dips through the odd musings of singer Perry Farrell, the kinetic drums of Stephen Perkins and the moody bass of newcomer Chris Chaney.

"It's kinda like your first day at work at a job that you somehow know how to do, and don't know why," says Navarro, whose post-Jane's pursuits included a stint with the Chili Peppers. "We don't have any intention of disbanding, unless some ungodly act happens, or somebody dies. We all intend to do our outside projects, but Jane's Addiction is the thing. This is the greatest musical experience I've ever had."

"I turn to music to either tap into or relate to all levels of the human condition," he says. "There's not one style of music that I like the most, because I don't always feel the same. I love the aggression of punk rock and metal, the ethereal sounds of Pink Floyd, and the textures of Led Zeppelin. But I also love electronic music and classical music. So there's not really one genre I identify with."

In turn, Morello—whom Navarro calls "one of my favorite all-time guitar players. He's up there with Hendrix and [Jimmy] Page"—drew from even broader influences.

While studying political science at Harvard in the early '80s, Morello practiced several hours a day, soaking in the styles of everyone from Ozzy sideman Randy Rhoads to jazz fusionist Al DiMeola, and played keg parties with cover bands.

"But it wasn't until I was able to jettison that as the beginning and end of what I wanted to do, and open up my musical head to ideas outside of traditional guitar playing—like hip-hop and techno and trash compactors and coyotes howling—that I really found my own voice," Morello says. "The guitar is nothing more than a piece of wood, six wires and a few electronics, and those things can be manipulated in many ways that don't have anything to do with the blues scale."

"In part of Rage Against the Machine, I was the DJ," Morello says of his rhythmic knack for making the guitar stutter, whistle and whine like a turntable, adding of his solos, "They have more to do with imagination than technique."

"I maintained some of the vocabulary," he says of his new band with Cornell and ex-Rage mates Tim Commerford on bass and Brad Wilk on drums. "But it's also grounded with the stuff that feels like the bones of the earth, the big riffs, and subtle chord changes that we've never played before."

As for possible Lollapalooza collaborations, Navarro says, "It's part of the appeal of having such talented musicians together, to jam with each other. In '91, I ended up playing with every band on the bill, and just about every member of each band came out with us. You don't know what's going to happen." iB

Jane's Addiction and Audioslave play Lollapalooza at the Tweeter Center July 25.

Sunday Sailing

Take to the water on one of the summer's dance cruises

Begun seven years ago, the annual Phoenix Landing boat cruise dance-party series has become a summertime tradition in Boston. Three Sunday-evening cruises set sail from Rowes Wharf every summer (one in June, July and September), pairing local house music DJs and a dance-happy crowd with a sunset voyage through Boston Harbor.

This year a fourth cruise, sponsored by The Kells, aims to add to the house music fun on the water. On July 13, Ireland native John Davis and Boston's Tym Ryan will hoist anchor for A Nice Day Out, a boat cruise that includes a special guest artist from Chicago: up-and-coming tech-house producer Joshua Collins. With a recent release on the seminal UK label Hooj Choons to his credit, Collins is on his way to dance music superstardom. The Kells will host a free pre-party and after-party, with a complimentary shuttle to the wharf, so partygoers can make a day of it.

On Sunday, July 20, the second installment of this summer's Phoenix Landing cruise series gets under way. A lengthy roster of Phoenix Landing resident DJs will provide music. "House music, a big, happy family of party people, and a boat just seem to go hand in hand," says DJ Randy Deshaies. A free after-party will follow at Phoenix Landing.

July 13: Free pre-party, after-party and shuttle at The Kells, 161 Brighton Ave., Allston. 6 pm boat departure from Rowes Wharf, 9 pm return. $25, advance purchase at www.groovetickets.com. 617-782-9082. 21+.

July 20: 6:30 pm departure from Rowes Wharf, 10 pm return. $15, advance purchase recommended. Free after-party at the Phoenix Landing, 10 pm-1am, 512 Mass. Ave., Cambridge. 617-576-6260. 21+. —Daniel Spurling improperimpersonals

If everyone kept their feelings bottled up like warm beer, we'd soon have antisocial behavior exploding all over the place and ruining the upholstery. So send us your letters of love and spleen, and we'll print them for the world to see. (Impersonals may be edited for taste, space and clarity.) Heck, it's better than making a fool of yourself in person. And IT'S FREE! Pick up a pen or keyboard (hint: we like the fact that we don't have to type up e-mailed messages) and write to:

Red Line Rush Hour Romance

I noticed you June 16 around 5 pm at Park Street while I was waiting for the Red Line. Despite the rush-hour chaos all around, you stood out from the crowd. You have dark hair and eyes, tanned skin, and you were wearing a red top. I was wearing a baby-blue dress shirt and jeans. I know you realized I was giving you some attention. You look like you could be Latina, and hopefully you do speak Spanish. The look you gave me as you got off the train at Kendall hit me hard and assured me that you did enjoy the attention from me. That look was enough to tell me you would respond if you read this, that you would let me buy you a drink, that you are just as curious about me as I am about you.
—redlinepoetry@yahoo.com

Rowes Wharf

You said I looked "safe," as we walked along in Downtown Crossing. I thought you looked marvelous, so we met at Rowes Wharf and had a delightful conversation. (This'll be your second time in the Impersonals this year!) So, my dance shoes are on, and the pinot gris is in the fridge. Drop me a line, and I'll give you a proper tour of Boston.
—JohnnyM786@hotmail.com

Joanna, Scientist from Kansas

We were at Government Center station. Me: Sitting on a wall, writing in a notebook. You: Had a less-than-divine time at Ned's. You'd called Steve Dave. Or was it Dave Steve? And the bangs brought bad luck. It couldn't possibly have been the ring. We got talking trying to decide if the Night Owl bus was ever going to come. You seemed cool, but I didn't get a chance to ask you to a show before the creepy blond guy interrupted. So, I'll ask now. Let me know what caused the calluses on your fingertips (to screen out weirdos). Yes, I remember, and it wasn't the mice.
—Bostoncomic@att.net

Shot in the Dark

I know this is a shot in the dark—that you'll read this or that you'll even remember me, but I'll take a chance anyway, as everyone does here! We spoke briefly at T.T. The Bear's in Cambridge, where you were bartending in the back, newer area. It was Dec. 11, 2002, and the bands SR-71 and Sugarcult were playing for the WBCN Xmas Rave. You struck me as down-to-earth, intelligent and genuinely nice—and I found those qualities, as well as your looks, very attractive. I was with someone who was my date that night or I would have spoken to you more. That never evolved into anything and for the longest time I have thought about placing this Impersonal to get in touch with you. I'm sure a guy like you is taken, but if you aren't and you read this and remember me (or if someone who works at T.T.'s reads this!), write to me. Just so I know it's you (and I'm hoping you remember this!), tell me what you were wearing that caused me to start the conversation. Hope to hear from you!
—daydreamer8383@yahoo.com

Thanks

I would just like to say thanks to the two guys who brought their German shepherds to the gravel running track in the Fens at 8 am June 19. First, thanks for smoking as you walked along the track; it was a really courteous thing to do to the four people running on the track. Second, thanks for allowing your dog to chase me as I ran. It doesn't matter if he is "nice," he's a German shepherd and could still tear me to shreds if he wanted to. But don't worry, I enjoy watching my life flash before my eyes every now and again as I work out; it spices things up a bit.
—Aggravated Runner

Chris

You work for IBT in the Hancock Tower. I find you exceptionally attractive and your personality intoxicating. Give me a sign to let me know how you feel.
—You Know Who

December 7, 2002

I stepped off the train, and you knew I was yours. Half a year later I'm still waking up to those beautiful brown eyes looking back at me and I know I'm the luckiest woman in the world.
—Ashy

Springsteen Tickets

You were two people behind me in line at the Orpheum to get tickets to Springsteen at Fenway. We never exchanged names during our two hours in line, but we had the same cell phone and raced to get tix from the Philly Ticketmaster. You won. But my friend got tickets online so I still get to go to the show even though they sold out as we waited. You were so excited to get through you didn't even know where your seats were (I'll be in the grandstands). I asked you out to lunch afterward, but you had plans to meet your brother. If you'd like to get a drink sometime, e-mail me.
—Ellenms32@yahoo.com.

You Caught My Eye and Flew Away

We met a couple weeks ago in the North End on Friday night. You were on your way back from Florida, ready to change out of your airline uniform and ready to enjoy your weekend. I was the talkative one who chatted with you while walking through the streets. We ran into each other later that night in front of Bricco and all I got was your name, Karen. I should have gotten your number. I would lov to chat again over coffee or a glass of wine sometime, but don't know how t reach you.
—Drew1212242@yahoo.com

To Spunky Girl

Please let me clarify my criticisms of "The Expert on International Standards." It is relatively common knowledge that if you are going slow or standing, you keep to the right on an escalator, sidewalk or pathway. I am a strict adherent to that, but I'm also aware that no one's bound by thi unwritten rule and I accept that. There are a lot more serious things in life to get upset over. What I was writing about was this guy's sheer nastiness to complete strangers. It was a short escalator ride, and if he couldn't get past the offending people he should have accepted that and waited the extra five seconds or taker the stairway. He was extremely rude, for which there was no excuse. You would think from his reaction that these guys robbed him or something. It would have been humorous if it weren't so anti-social and pathetic.
—NFG

Sultry Day at Economy Hardware

It was a scorching Friday afternoon ir Allston, June 27. You: sexy with dark hair, dark eyes, grey tank top, black pants. Me: unshaven, green polo shirt tan shorts. We saw each other in the College Furniture place across the street, then minutes later in Economy I smiled at you and we kept running into each other. While you looked at air conditioners, I wandered around the store, trying to come up with something to say. When I did, you were gone. It should have been: "How about some ice cream?"
—mass_ave@yahoo.com

Noosey

It's been 10 years now since our first international coupling. I love you as I've never loved another. You are my north, my south, my east and west, my working week and my Sunday res my noon, my midnight, my talk, my song. My love forever.

rockie horoscope

JULY 9 – 22, 2003

BY ROCKIE GARDINER

CANCER JUNE 21-JULY 22

Since Moon Children—well, the women anyway—are such dedicated romantics, let's assume that having magnetic Venus in your sign will attract the picture-perfect partner you've been daydreaming about. And since affectionate Venus is on the best of terms with horny Mars in Pisces, the attraction should be mutual. If ever you longed to fulfill a favorite fantasy, this would be the time. Why not see just how compatible (or delusional) two water signs can be—one egging (or is that leading?) the other on? Where's that rational Aquarian when you need one?

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

It's perfectly natural, even for a spotlight-seeking Leo, to want to hide out in the weeks before your birthday and gather psychological strength. Face it, what lies ahead, or who lies in wait, are reasonable concerns. Even though you're the king of your realm, a Lion is obliged to protect whatever beloved beasts live in that kingdom. This month the nurturing Cancer sun reinforces those safety-first, creature-comforting tendencies. But please, don't overdo the (s)mothering. Listen for warning cries and early signs of rebellion.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

The wisdom of the ages, the music of the spheres, the sound of silence: A couple of times a year—usually when your Mercury ruler and the life-giving sun conjunct—you're given an opportunity to tune into the ineffable. Hearing anything the Ancient Masters need to tell you while cherry bombs go off and Roman candles whiz by can be quite the accomplishment. Nevertheless, try to stay within inner earshot and listen to the words, especially the lyrics, running round in your head. There's an important message in the madness.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

Your career accomplishments, or other achievements that reflect your family's good name, are in synch with your pleasures—for a change. The activities you're currently participating in, even the challenges, only add to the good things people are saying about you. Such acceptance is the stuff that Libran sociability is made of; that, and the supportive trine between your loving Venus ruler and thrill-seeking Mars in your house of romance and risk. An unexpected invitation is waiting in the wings; an unusual alliance is about to be formed.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

Try to postpone anything that isn't a life-or-death matter so that you can devote the rest of the month to nurturing who and what you love best. You might not get such a painless opportunity to reveal how you feel for a long time to come. While it'll be another two years until your Mars co-ruler is in Pisces again, affectionate Venus won't be in Cancer at the same time. It's only now—not in 2005 or 2007 either—that solar Scorpios, as the third leg in a rare Grand Water trine, will reap so many benefits from the harmonious Mars-Venus connection.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

It's traditional. This time of year, during the Cancer-Capricorn time slot, Archers with the gift of foresight take aim in an attempt to target what'll hit big during the fall season. No matter what the product, service or concept is, now is when you get to figure out how to cash in on the next new thing. The people you're attracted to this week and next will probably turn out to be the folks whose resources you can tap into, not the ones to fulfill your romantic longings. Who said summer is vacation time?

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

A romantic interlude, your annual love fest, is set to occur while affectionate Venus merges with your Saturn ruler. After they hook up on the 8th, simply lay back and let Venus bring on the pleasures and pretty things. Since this is the first time in your adult life that these two energies will meet in Cancer—the sign of your cosmic mate—you might feel overwhelmed by your willingness to spread the joy or by the seriousness of your commitment. Besides, such good fortune can extend to your finances as well.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

This summer the same-old, same-old can morph into entirely new experiences. Don't rely on history (we like to eat at this joint, we usually visit those folks) to strike the same pleasant chord it has in the past. Because your Uranus ruler is currently in all-encompassing Pisces instead of in rational Aquarius, you're liable to be less sure of your reaction to or understanding of what's happening. For example, when affectionate Venus favors Uranus this week, is it you who's getting hit on or is it your neighbor?

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

A period of harmony, coupled with a healthy libido, is your reward for enduring the latest round of discord and upsets. Make sure you get your fair share of loving when Venus trines Mars and Uranus in your sign this weekend. Although a Crab may be the most compatible choice for a summer romance, feel free to come on to a rambunctious Ram, a quirky Aquarius, even a mild-mannered Libra. But if you want someone for the long haul, check out a Capricorn home-owner who can fix things. You could use some stability.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

Domestic bliss, or whatever is passing for it this summer, is yours for the asking. With so much planetary attention focused on Cancerian concerns—Mom, apple pie, cultural ties, national security—a relative stranger may try to narrow the gap and invite you to "meet my folks." But if you'd rather channel this seasonal desire for cozy and comfortable to less fattening pastimes than greeting and eating, how about redoing the kitchen? Whatever makes you house-proud and more secure would work.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

The new and the old can be equally appealing because your magnetic Venus ruler is attracting both innovative Uranus and tradition-based Saturn. If you want to add excitement and novelty to a borderline boring relationship, this would be a good time. Every now and then Venus (the feminine) and Mars (the masculine principle) stop struggling for supremacy and let you experience perfect harmony and affection, the pleasures of peaceful coexistence. One of those deliciously romantic interludes is coming up on 7/11. Enjoy.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

Time to cash in. You might not think you deserve a reward, nevertheless, there's a subtle, perhaps even a substantial one headed your way. Whether you spoke up in protest or did something to rattle an important someone's equilibrium is neither here nor there. What matters is the positive steps being taken and how easily they'll fit into other aspects of your life. Make sure to leave time for the sillier side of romance; you can learn a lot this summer from billing and cooing and other lovebird behavior. Mating for life!

A PARTY BY ANY OTHER CHARITY WOULD NOT SMELL SO SWEET...

Hope springs eternal, even after a spring of eternally bad weather, as the Rose Garden Party to benefit Park Arts proved.

The invitation said "garden party attire enthusiastically encouraged," which, for women, apparently means wearing an elaborate floral hat, and for men, something linen or seersucker, with a straw-boater or a Panama hat, and sunglasses.

In fact, about the only woman who dared to go bare-headed was restaurateur Lydia Shire (who inexplicably skipped the chance to stick flowers in her chef's toque), but otherwise, everyone was in full compliance. Among them: mover and shaker Wendy Shattuck (sporting the added accessory of a purse shaped like a watering can); brunette cutie pie Vanessa Cronin; improbably tall arts booster Bill Nigreen; fashionista Caroline Collings (looking stunning in a checked Fiandaca suit); the oh-so-social Beacon Hill triumvirate of Karyn Lamb, Emily Webster and Allison Fischoeder; their South End counterparts, Carolyn Rodeno, Molly Dunne and Heather Earl; first daughter Susan Menino Fenton and her trio of adorable little moppets; ultra-philanthropist Diddy Cullinane; über-jeweler Donna DePrisco; and one woman whose French manicure did a decent job of hiding the dirt under her fingernails that she got from digging in her garden.

"Hey, when the weather's as lousy as it has been, you take advantage of every second the sun is out," she said in her defense. But she was by no means the only example of aberrant behavior brought on by the biblical downpours of the Spring That Never Was. Normally scintillating conversationalists were reduced to talking about the weather (or more precisely, bitching about how bad it was). One woman claimed to be disoriented upon seeing blue sky for the first time in weeks, and another arrived wearing all black.

"That's garden party attire?" critiqued another guest, to which someone else responded, "Maybe she's dressed as a storm cloud."

Of course, the silver lining was that the roses looked especially lush, and thankfully, the weather held, allowing Irish redheaded fashion avatar Marie Galvin, Boston Lyric Opera costume designer Kathleen McDermott and Boston Magazine fashion editor Kim Atkinson to judge the hat contest.

"Are those real orchids and ivy?" one of them asked a woman. "Yup," she said proudly. "My housekeeper made it. I got home this afternoon, and she said, 'Your hat's in the refrigerator.'"

WAKE-UP CALL...

It was unusually early in the morning and an utterly out-of-the-way place to find a gathering of some of Boston's biggest socialites, but there they were, bright and early, at the Black Falcon Marine Terminal in South Boston.

The occasion was a breakfast aboard one of the Mercy Ships—a fleet of decommissioned boats, outfitted as floating hospitals, that sail around the world, providing free medical care in underdeveloped countries. An Afro-Caribbean band serenaded guests as they arrived at the dock, where they then climbed the gangplank and were greeted by the charity's founders, Don and Deyon Stephens.

Among those granted permission to come aboard: patrician do-gooder Richard Dalton; perennial delight Sylvia Pope; Back Bay restaurateur Debbie Lewis; the gorgeous mother-and-daughter duo of Gale and Amory Minot; impossibly chic professor Michele Talbot; multiple board member Michael Halperson; Chestnut Hill real estate minx Vicky Whitney; the Right Reverend Ray Hammond; babe-a-licious ob-gyn Dr. Nawal Nour; apple blossom Mary Kay Holder; Dola (Mrs. Staples) Stemberg; mondo mover and shaker Richard Taylor; Wang CEO Joe Spaulding and his wife, Joyce; Antiguan power-babe Collette Phillips; Channel 5 on-air glamazon Karen Holmes Ward; and one man who said to a friend, "I've never seen you this early in the morning," to which she responded, "Really? How do I look?...Actually, don't answer that."

During breakfast, one woman described her plans for the following day, which included having a new cosmetic procedure known as Thermage.

"You go in and get a Demerol," she explained. "Then they prick your face and do this heat thing that fuses the collagen in your skin and makes you look 10 years younger."

Breakfast was followed by an informational video that showed people in Africa whom the Mercy Ships had treated for medical conditions like cleft palate and disfiguring facial tumors, which prompted the woman having plastic surgery the next day to say, "Well, that kind of puts things in perspective." iB

BEHIND THE BEST

Every other Monday morning, the first bundles of our latest issue arrive at the IMPROPER's offices in the Back Bay, and staffers experience that all-too-fleeting satisfaction of holding the tangible, finished product in our hands. As the largest issue the IMPROPER has ever produced, this year's Boston's Best issue brings a little added sense of parental pride to everyone who had a hand in it.

The task of naming the best this city has to offer in food, drink, entertainment, sports, fashion, nightlife and more—some 279 awards in all—is of course a research project of mammoth proportions. We poll the experts (see "Meet the Judges" on page 27), read, make calls, visit establishments and deliberate the nominees (sometimes heatedly) until solid winners emerge. Then comes the writing, photographing, editing, fact checking, designing, proofreading, double fact checking, proofreading and more proofreading.

Amid the long hours of serious work, however, we do manage to have some fun. As part of our research, we hang out at bars, try the newest restaurants, browse jewelry stores, watch a lot of baseball and even get haircuts. This year, the staff selected the winners in the contentious categories of best pizza and best Buffalo wings (we got more reader letters last year on our Buffalo wings award than any other topic) in the only way that seemed fair and scientific: We ordered takeout from all the nominees and decided those weighty matters democratically.

For me, a highlight of producing this issue was a road trip to New York with three other IMPROPER staffers to photograph Miss USA Susie Castillo for our cover. After a night of hanging out in a Midtown karaoke bar—with one member of our group bravely belting out the not-for-amateurs "Me and Bobby McGee" and the rest of us mostly cowering behind our beers—we arrived at the studio the next morning with bags full of dresses and some stars-and-stripes fabric. Castillo, who really is as witty and down-to-earth as she sounds in her interview with Jonathan Soroff (see page 23), cheerfully spent hours with us and even let fashion editor Samantha House sew her into the American flag–inspired dress that House created on the spot, to the amazement of the rest of us. (Castillo loved the dress so much that she took it with her to the Miss Universe pageant.)

UPS guy gets in on the pizza tasting.

Thanks go to Susie Castillo for beautifying our cover and to all the people who helped create this issue: the judges who cast their ballots and the many other experts we consulted; the interns who tirelessly researched and checked facts; Jonathan Soroff, the longtime IMPROPER writer whose sparkling writing of the lion's share of our entries makes the issue such a kick to read year after year; and all the other staffers. Even if you're not a pack rat, this year's Boston's Best issue is one you'll want to keep around and refer to again and again—until next July.

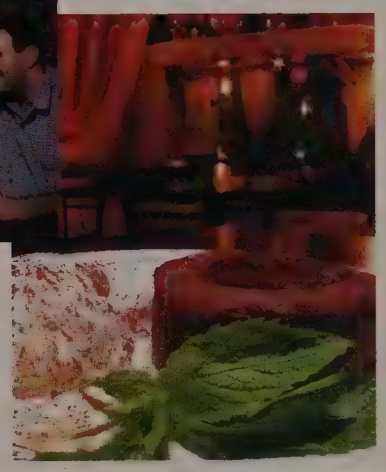
BEACON HILL BOÎTE

Listening to chef Scott Herritt's Southern drawl, one might expect him to dish up a platter of chicken-fried steak and mashed potatoes rather than a bowl of tender, hand-cut tagliatelle pasta with grilled balsamic-glazed lobster, fresh peas and cream. Don't be fooled. The Oklahoma native is a master kneader who ran his own pasta shop back in Norman, and his resume includes stints at Legal Sea Foods, the Bostonian Hotel and most recently, the Florentine Café.

On July 9, Herritt and his wife, Danielle, opened Grotto, a cozy, garden-level Italian boîte in Beacon Hill. They gutted the former Istanbul Café, exposing pipes in the ceiling and painting them a warm red; tearing down walls to reveal the original brick; and adding vibrant orange, yellow and red curtains, giant mirrors, chandeliers and colorful artwork. "It was design-by-fire," says Herritt of his wife's efforts to make Grotto (which means "cave" in Italian) a cheery-looking restaurant in a mere three weeks.



She succeeded, and with its background of music by the likes of Billie Holiday and Lena Horne, Grotto is a welcome addition to a neighborhood sorely lacking in restaurants. The prices are reasonable, topping off at $22 for entrées, and the dishes are mouthwatering: grilled seafood salad with lemon, olive oil and thyme; and ricotta gnocchi with summer mushroom saute, cream and truffle oil, to name two. Pair an entrée with an affordable bottle of Caymus Conundrum (priced just above retail at $37) and prepare to indulge. 37 Bowdoin St., Boston (617-227-3434).

PLAY BALL

We know there's nothing like a trip to Fenway Park, but that can also be an expensive proposition. If you want to watch a professional baseball game without grand-slamming your wallet, there are plenty of pro and semipro teams within a reasonable drive. Minor-league teams have to try a little harder to draw fans, so you can expect lots of fun promotions in addition to cheap tickets. The Brockton Rox, for instance (most expensive ticket: $8) regularly host promos such as "Bring Your Mother-in-Law Night," which featured an interactive Newlywed Game spoof called "How Well Do You Know Your Mother-in-Law?" Another nearby ballclub is the North Shore Spirit, who play at Fraser Field in Lynn and feature regular appearances by "World Famous Monkey Boy" (the next one is Aug. 2). Of course, if you'd like to see how the Red Sox farm system is developing, the Portland Sea Dogs and Pawtucket Red Sox—the Double-A and Triple-A affiliates of the Red Sox—offer a chance to see the potential stars of tomorrow, and tickets there also max out at $8. Speaking of future stars, the 10-team Cape Cod Baseball League had 183 alumni in the major leagues last year, including a former Orleans Cardinals player by the name of Nomar. So next time you yearn for the crack of a bat and a box of Cracker Jack, think outside the Fenway box seat.—Ezra Dyer inner view

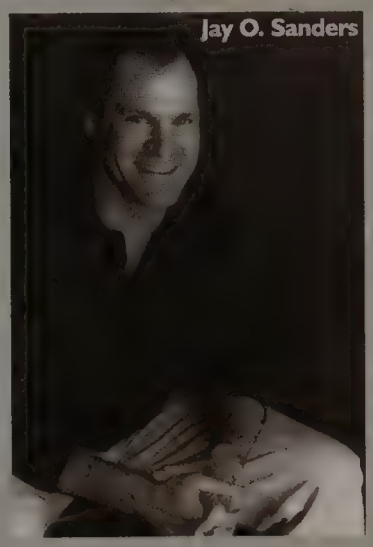
A KING-SIZE ROLE



If the lead actor in the Commonwealth Shakespeare Company's summer production of Macbeth (through August 10) leaves you wondering "Where do I know that guy from?" here's a hint: He's starred in episodes of Law & Order, Roseanne and Northern Exposure, and in countless films and Broadway roles. Veteran thespian Jay O. Sanders' role as the title character in this year's Shakespeare on the Common production is just one more bullet point on a long and impressive list of acting credits. We recently caught up with Sanders, who's been enjoying our city with his wife, Maryann Plunkett—an actress and Boston native—and their 9-year-old son.

IB: For what role do people most often recognize you?

JS: It tends to be whatever they saw most recently. Recently a lot of people have recognized me from guest roles on Law & Order and Law & Order: Criminal Intent. They still see me on Roseanne playing John Goodman's biker best friend, or Angels in the Outfield or JFK. It's a long list and very varied, which is probably the greatest success of my career.

IB: What is your favorite scene or line from Macbeth?

JS: I have two favorite lines. One is "Digg'd i' th' dark," said by one of the witches, and my other is the phrase "What is the night?" [said by Macbeth], which I think is very simple and ranges into the full darkness of this play.

IB: What's the most fun about playing Macbeth?

JS: I get to jump around on stage and do sword fights and say great speeches.

IB: Do you ever accidentally slip into iambic pentameter?

JS: Yes, constantly. Much to the dismay of subway riders everywhere. I get many looks on the T.

IB: What do you think of the movie Scotland, PA?

JS: It's great fun if you know Macbeth because of all the references, but it certainly doesn't have the depth of Shakespeare and the language and thought, but it's a wonderful film.

IB: Do you prefer performing in a theater or outdoors?

JS: Both. I love the control of a theater...and the lack of control outdoors. You're very naked—open to the sky, the wind, the weather. It's very exciting because you have to [deal with the elements], and the audience shares that with you and it brings them closer to you.

IB: What are some of your upcoming projects?

JS: Next summer there's a big blockbuster film called The Day After Tomorrow with Jake Gyllenhaal, Dennis Quaid and Sela Ward with the director of Independence Day. I did a cable film with Charles Dutton about the Beltway snipers and their capture. I also have a a small independent called Second Born by director Jevon Roush that will find its way to festivals and eventually to theaters sometime.

WORDLY WARES

As I was walking through the infrequently visited annex of Copley Place, a new store caught my eye: the Earthbound Trading Company. Inside is a kaleidoscope of color, with fabulous home goods and giftware on every shelf. There were tribal masks on the walls, Asian lanterns, stone art, silver jewelry, minerals, fossils, hand-blown glass spheres, potted bamboo, candelabra chandeliers...too many things to list. Most are handcrafted from natural materials. It's a national chain, but it is as if owner Chuck Gordon (a native of Concord, Mass.) traveled all around the world picking up a little something here and there. The result is hou of shopping inspiration. And the prices won't break th bank, ranging from $2 to around $150. This is a great place to find a gift for anyone. (617-536-2300).

EAT AND FLY

Best of Fest... Houston's might just be up for a rookie of the year award. The Phoenix-based chain beat out such New England seafood stalwarts as the Farragut House, the Lobster Pot and the Chart House for the coveted Silver Bowl at the 22nd annual Chowderfest July 6. More than 11,000 chowdah-heads sampled the award-winning recipe—a tasty marriage of light cream, cubed potatoes, celery, leeks, spices and, of course, clams. Not one to waste a good thing, Houston's donated the 60-gallon postfest chowder surplus to one of its favorite local charities, the New England Shelter for Homeless Veterans.

Perdix Alights... After fleeing its Jamaica Plain nest last fall, Perdix has landed a new home in the South End space formerly occupied by Truc. Husband-and-wife team Tim Partridge and Nini Diana searched for a year before finding the perfect new nest for their creative-American concept, which outgrew the confines of its original 10-table haunt soon after its 2001 opening. In the new 50-seat dining room, Partridge promises to offer the same delicious seafood-focused fare that earned Perdix a steady following. Doors open late July. 560 Tremont St., South End (617-338-8070).

Charlestown Chew... Sorelle's of Charlestown opened the second installment of its beloved bakery and café July 2 in City Square, just a few blocks from the original. In this case, bigger most likely means better. The new location features about 5 times the seating room; an outdoor, waterfront patio; an expanded menu; extended hours; and beer and wine. Fans of the original might need a time to adjust to the new modern look and revamped menu, which includes less comfort food and more creative grilled and pressed sandwiches. But fear not: Everything's still homemade. 100 City Square, Charlestown (617-242-5980).

Air Appetit... The idea of airport dining is no longer such a hard pill to swallow. Former Red Sox outfielder Darren Lewis opened Dine Boston Bar & Grill and Dine Boston Café in Logan's Terminal E in mid May. The café offers quick fixes like sandwiches and pastries, while the grill features full-service dining, including a raw bar and brick-oven pizzas. "We tried to capture the different areas of Boston, from the Harbor to the Back Bay to the North End," says restaurant partner Michael Levine. Many menu items are actually inspired by Boston kitchen virtuosos, including Chris Schlesinger of the East Coast Grill and Joe Tinnirello of Terramia. "We want to be the last taste...the reminder of New England before visitors leave," adds Levin. (617-567-5700).—E.H. J.I. and J.S.

ZEN FOR FIDO

Some call it "Doga," some call it "Ruff Yoga." Others just call it ridiculous. Regardless, the trend of doggie yoga has people talking—and dog owners stretching their pups' legs into interesting poses. Fitness trendsetters at Crunch gym in New York, which has been hosting Ruff Yoga sessions semi-regularly in Madison Square Park, say the class "brings you and your pup closer as you do traditional and nontraditional yoga poses on the same mat." Stretching, breathing, praising ("good boy") and hugging are par for this course, which is free to the public. Crunch plans to bring Ruff Yoga to the Boston Common in August and September. In the meantime, we asked a few local yogis for their reaction: "I think it's silly," says Barbara Benagh, director of the Yoga Studio. "I just think that dog don't need yoga. It trivializes yoga." On the othe hand, Claudia de Haven Biddle of Snow Lion Yog says, "You'd help out an adult human. Wh wouldn't you help an animal?"

Consider this: Two (non-satirical) books o the subject, Doga: Yoga for Dogs and Yoga for Pe and the People Who Love Them, are due out th fall. And doggie yoga is just one of many service that have popped up in recent years to cater t our four-legged friends, including doggie day care, doggie ma sage, doggie playgroups and doggie bakeries. We'll leave yo with this morsel: The Forward (a socialist Yiddish newspaper New York) reported recently that dog owners, pet stores– even synagogues —are now welcoming Jewish families' do into the fold by hosting "Bark Mitzvahs." SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Cheers to our Beers... The votes are in, and BeerAdvocate.com's 13,200 discerning suds swillers have ranked several Boston establishments and brewers among the top 50 in the nation. Highlights include Redbones, which came in second in the "Places to Have a Pint" category (Anam Cara in Brookline also made the cut at number 17) and Cambridge Brewing Company, which ranked fifth in the brewpub category. In an entirely different contest, Westport-based Buzzards Bay Brewing's Olde Buzzard Lager was chosen as one of the top 13 beers in America in the July issue of Playboy. Redbones occasionally works Buzzards Bay into its rotation of beers, so keep an eye on their menu and you could drink one of Playboy's top beers at one of BeerAdvocate's top venues. Cheers to that.

Mohegan Fun... Cheap flights and amazing hotel rates may be enticing you to visit Las Vegas this summer, but the next best thing is actually just a two-hour drive away. Mohegan Sun in Uncasville, Conn., may not be the MGM Grand, but thanks to nightlife kingpin Patrick Lyons, it's getting there. Mohegan After Dark, Lyons' new multimillion-dollar entertainment project, opened June 13 with three bustling boîtes: Lucky's Lounge, a second incarnation of the Vegas-style, Rat Pack-y restaurant/bar in South Boston; the Dubliner, a traditional Hibernian haunt; and the super swank 88 Ultra Lounge. This über-luxe lounge is themed after Light in the Bellagio and features VIP seating galore for anyone who's thirsty enough to buy a full bottle (there's even a grand VIP suite complete with personal butler and bathroom) and a Miami nightclub-style 14-foot bed for extreme lounging.

Ye Olde Oyster... As if Faneuil Hall weren't already overrun with tourists, the United States Department of the Interior went and added a national landmark to it. The Union Oyster House won the title of national historic landmark on May 27 on not just one, but two accounts: It's the oldest continually run restaurant and oyster bar in the country, and it's the oldest standing brick building of Georgian architecture in Boston. Over the course of the building's 287-year life, the oyster house has hosted such historic heavyweights as Daniel Webster, Franklin Roosevelt, John F. Kennedy and Ozzy Osbourne. If that's not enough of a draw, we hear they have decent seafood too.

House of Glass... The ancient art of glassblowing has gone mainstream, scoring a spot on Newbury Street and a two-page spread in Elle's August issue. Do we sense a trend in the making? The owners of Newbury's the Hempest opened Vòlta, a glass art gallery, just above their hemp clothing and body-care store July 1. Co-owner Jonathan Napoli says that he and his partners had showcased some glass art at the Hempest and decided it needed its own space. Vòlta features handblown glass bowls, jewelry, goblets, paperweights, beads and marbles from national and local artists, including Roxbury's Diablo Glass.

Everything is for sale, and nothing is mass-produced. The shop also sells hard-to-find glassblowing tools and equipment. "There's nothing else like it in Boston," says Napoli. "There are a lot more people getting into glassblowing as an art, and we're hoping that it will catch on [in Boston] too." 207 Newbury St., Boston (617-778-5517). —E.D., E.H., J.I. and J.S.

Cosmetic Laser Treatments

If those tiny, broken capillaries around your nose have always bothered you, or you've been frustrated by the time-consuming, one-follicle-at-a-time nature of electrolysis, perhaps it's time to ride the new wave of beauty treatments: lasers. McArdle, a registered nurse and licensed esthetician, has traveled extensively to research the newest laser devices. Because she takes extra time to carefully match laser wavelengths to each person's skin and hair, she leaves skin healthy, clear and unblemished.

Laser Hair Removal

Such atrocities as unibrows and Wookie backs are no match for the laser hair-removal treatment at Beauty Therapies. Whether a client wants some upper-lip fuzz removed or an entirely hairless body, this procedure is the quickest and most comfortable way to permanently reduce hair growth. Treatments can be performed, with minimum discomfort, in an hour or less, and after several sessions, most patients report little hair regrowth. Unlike some practitioners, Beauty Therapies has the newest laser technology that's effective for most hair and skin colors. And compared with a lifetime of buying razors and waxes, it's relatively inexpensive.

BOOM TOWN

You can't have a short fuse when you're Boomer the Cannon

Boomer, the ladies' cannon

I've lost consciousness due to heatstroke only once in my life, so I wouldn't let an inconvenience like 95-degree weather stop me from donning a heavy foam costume and fulfilling my duties as Boomer the Cannon at a recent major league lacrosse game between the Boston Cannons and the Long Island Lizards. The show must go on: That's my mantra whenever I agree to become an anthropomorphic piece of artillery at a professional lacrosse game.

I arrive at Cawley Stadium in Lowell and make my way to the dressing room, where Boomer waits to be brought to life. The Boomer getup includes heavy red pants, silver stockings, a red shirt-type thing that isn't much more than sleeves, gloves that feature only three bulbous fingers, enormous foam shoes and a huge, hard foam body shaped like a cannon, complete with wheels. The perfect outfit for a scorching summer day.

Luckily I have Jim Dwyer, the regular man behind the cannon, to acquaint me with the typical duties and hazards of livin' la vida Boomer. "The body is open at the top, which is both a blessing and a curse," says Dwyer. "If you get too close to the stands, people might throw stuff down on your head. I'll help you watch out for little kids, because you look out the eyebrows of the face and you can't see anything directly in front of you. And be aware that teenage boys will probably try to hug you. For some reason they assume that there's a girl inside the costume." Great. And I don't even get to make them take me to the prom for my troubles.

We exit the dressing room and head directly for a birthday party under a nearby tent. "Who wants an autograph from Boomer?" Dwyer asks the kids. He somehow gets a marker into my heavily padded, three-fingered paw and hands me a T-shirt to sign, but I can't get my arms out far enough in front of me to see what I'm doing. The shirt's young owner, however, is sufficiently distant for me to witness the look of disappointment on his face when he's presented with Boomer's expressionist handwriting. "I'm sorry that my signature looks like a skid mark," I want to tell him, but I take the Mascot Code of Silence seriously. I'd sooner fire a clown out my head than speak.

Moving on, Boomer heads to the main gate to meet fans on their way into the stadium. I realize at this point that communicating with only your arms, hands and legs is extremely difficult. I find myself repetitively waving and giving the thumbs up. When I try to express frustration, as when the Lizards score a goal, my angry foot-stomping is undermined by the dopey grin permanently plastered across my face. Boomer looks a few ounces short of a full load of gunpowder, if you know what I mean.

Walking past the stands, I make at least two small children cry, which I suppose is understandable. A dancing purple dinosaur is one thing; a dancing piece of weaponry brandishing a lacrosse stick is quite another.

Most of the older kids are friendly, and many pictures are taken, but one lovable little scamp severely tests the Mascot Code of Silence, as well as the Mascot Code of Not Smacking Little Kids Even When They Richly Deserve It. "My Dad says that those costumes are a rip-off, because they're really hot inside," Billy Urchin informs me. By this time, I'm so hot that the two dueling lacrosse teams are intermittently morphing into centaurs playing jai alai against the Jackson 5, and my eyes burn from the river of sweat that I'm unable to wipe away.

I TAKE THE MASCOT CODE OF SILENCE SERIOUSLY. I'D SOONER FIRE A CLOWN OUT MY HEAD THAN SPEAK.

But I try to communicate that I'm not hot at all, waving my hand in a "What, me hot? Naaah," gesture. Billy will have to learn sooner or later that his Dad is a god-damn idiot who doesn't know crap about mascot costumes. But little Billy reiterates his Dad's opinion on mascot heat-retention properties, along with many other absolute truths put forth by his Dad, who is apparently an omniscient deity. Just as I am ready to put this kid in a full nelson and throw him over the railing, Dwyer saves me, saying, "I think Boomer says he could take your Dad. OK, see you later, kids."

By the end of the game, I don't understand lacrosse any better, but I do have a newfound appreciation for the men and women inside our cannons and sausages. So next time you see Boomer the Cannon or Wally the Green Monster or Lucky the Leprechaun, pour a little cold beer into their eyebrows. Trust me, they'll thank you. IB

BOSTON'S BEST

You know a winner when you see one. Our cover girl, Susie Castillo—who after being crowned Miss Massachusetts last November went on to win the Miss USA title—has taken the beauty pageant world by storm (one glance at her tells you why). However, in Castillo's case, beauty is truly more than skin deep, as we're sure you'll agree after reading her interview with Jonathan Soroff on the next two pages. We think Castillo's brains, beauty, sense of humor and energy epitomize the best that Boston has to offer, and that makes her the perfect person to lead off our 12th annual Boston's Best issue. So we've officially crowned her Miss Boston's Best 2003, and on the 66 pages that follow, we've got heaps of other superlatives coming your way—nearly 300 winners that will inspire you to try something new and remind you to enjoy the city's many wonders. Put this issue on your required-reading list this summer. We think you'll be glad you did.

Reigning Miss USA Susie Castillo, 23, was born and raised in Lawrence. After graduating from Endicott College, she supported herself as an office manager while pursuing a modeling career and competing in regional pageants. Competing as Miss Massachusetts, she was crowned Miss USA in San Antonio, Texas, during the 52nd annual staging of the competition. A fluent Spanish speaker with Puerto Rican roots, she has dedicated her reign to dismantling cultural and ethnic stereotypes, and to increasing awareness of breast and ovarian cancer. As the titleholder, she receives a $20,000 wardrobe, a soap opera appearance, and a $45,000 scholarship to the School for Film and Television in New York, and she travels extensively. In June, she represented the United States in the Miss Universe pageant, held in Panama. She currently lives in New York but returns to Lawrence frequently.

Jonathan Soroff: So, in the presidential line of succession, where does Miss USA fall?

Susie Castillo: Y'know what? I have no idea where our vice president is, or what he looks like, since he's always in that undisclosed location. So I think I come second.

JS: What are the day-to-day duties of being Miss USA—waking up and wearing a crown?

SC: Oh, yeah. I wear my crown while I vacuum. I also enjoy shopping and cooking in it. Seriously, right after I won, it was a media whirlwind. I did a lot of public appearances. I visited our troops.

JS: So how much does the crown weigh?

SC: Not much. Actually, the Miss Massachusetts crown weighed a lot more. I think the Miss USA crown is lighter because it's solid sterling silver.

JS: Maybe it just feels lighter because your head got bigger.

SC: [Laughs.] No, I have a big head anyway. Naturally, I can't wear hats. It's like an inside joke with my friends. I've given up trying to find a hat that fits me. Even baseball caps. I think I should start a chain of big-and-tall hat shops, for plus-sized heads.

JS: Does the Miss USA sash chafe under the armpits?

SC: No, it's silky.

JS: Should someone give a lifetime achievement award to Charo?

SC: Who's Charo?

JS: Who's Charo?! She was the original Jennifer Lopez! The major Latina star of the 1970s! She was on The Love Boat.

SC: Dude, I was born in 1979. Oh, now I know. She's the one who went "cuchi-cuchi!"

JS: Exactly.

SC: Love her.

JS: So could you kick Miss America's butt?

SC: Absolutely. No question.

JS: Since you represent all of them, how many of the states have you actually visited?

SC: Let's see—I've been to a lot. Maybe 20. I went on a road trip after graduating from college, and I've been to a few more since then.

JS: By the time you're finished, do you have to visit all 52?

SC: Umm, there's only 50.

JS: That was a trick question! I was trying to stump you!

SC: [Laughs.] I think I caught you. But the answer is, hopefully, yes.

JS: Why doesn't Miss USA have her own song, like Miss America? Y'know, whoever that cheeseball is, singing, "There she is, Miss A-mer-i-ca."

SC: We're better than that. We're trying to make it more modern. If you've ever seen Miss USA, it always changes with the times, especially with the new ownership: Donald Trump and NBC.

JS: Speaking of which, how does Donald Trump's toupee look close up?

SC: I think it was, it's umm, bad. Yeah. [Laughs.] He's actually a very nice guy. Very kind. Unlike what most people think, myself included before I met him, he's very likable and down-to-earth, you know?

JS: One ability you'd like to have for the talent competition?

SC: Although we are talented in many ways, the Miss America pageant is what you're thinking of.

JS: You mean Miss USA doesn't have a talent competition?

SC: We have three areas of competition. One is interview, where we speak with all of the judges. We have swimsuit competition, and we have evening-gown competition. Those are the three areas, and each is worth 33 percent.

JS: OK, if you had to have a talent, what would it be?

SC: I would not enter. I don't sing. I've never taken dance classes. I don't do well with choreography. In fact, I'm the state delegate they put all the way in the back, because she couldn't get the choreography down.

JS: People tend to dismiss beauty pageant winners as gorgeous airheads. Tell me one thing that would make the world take you seriously.

SC: I think the way I carry myself makes the world take me seriously.

JS: So how do you plan to solve all the world's problems?

SC: That's tough. I think I'm going to need your help on that one.

JS: I'll do whatever I can, short of appearing on TV in a swimsuit. Pro or con the swimsuit competition?

SC: Pro! If anything, it empowers women. It's like saying, "Look at us. We're fit. We're healthy." And then when you hear us speaking intelligently, you realize we've got brains, too. We're the total package.

JS: Your biggest beauty secret?

SC: To eat lots of french fries.

JS: Oh, most women will be thrilled to hear that.

SC: Then, of course, there's water. Drink lots of water.

JS: OK, put these things in order of importance: ending world hunger, creating world peace, and figuring out how to stop hair frizz on a humid day.

[THE SWIMSUIT COMPETITION] EMPOWERS WOMEN. YOU HEAR US SPEAKING INTELLIGENTLY AND REALIZE WE'VE GOT BRAINS, TOO.

SC: I'm gonna have to say tha hunger and world peace are right u there with the hair frizz.

JS: You hear about all these bizarre things beauty pageant contestants do, like tapin up their breasts, and putting Preparation H under their eyes. Is any of that true?

SC: Sounds like you've met a few o them. Yeah, I've seen some girl doing both of those. Preparation H on the thighs, too. Then they wra them in Saran Wrap. Supposedly, i makes you firmer.

JS: That's absurd!

SC: Well, personally, I enjoy going t the gym more than to CVS.

JS: Give me a juicy story about backstage backstabbing at Miss USA.

SC: [Sweetly.] I wasn't backstage, be cause I made the top 10.

JS: Come on. You must've heard or seen something nasty like a hair-pulling catfight, evening-gown sabotage…

SC: Actually, all the officials were saying how surprise they were at what a great group it was. We were very we behaved. Honestly, I didn't hear of anything. Thos things only happen in the movies.

JS: How many aliens from other planets actually enter th Miss Universe pageant, and is it a handicap not to be a carbon-based life-form?

SC: [Laughs.] Not many, and yes, they don't do ver well. I think it's the big bald head and the bug eyes.

JS: You get a $20,000 wardrobe allowance? That's barely two gowns at Giorgio Armani.

SC: I know! It's a crying shame. But there's actually stylist who works with the titleholders. She gets a per centage off, or there are designers who let her borro things. A lot of the time, if there's a gala or somethin and I need an evening gown, a certain designer will len me something. It's nice. It's what the celebrities do.

JS: You also get to appear on a soap opera?

SC: I do. On Passions.

JS: What character do you want to play?

SC: I don't know. I've never watched that show. I' probably be cracking up the whole time. They're just s dramatic. I used to watch Guiding Light, and there's th character Reva. How many times has she been dead?

JS: She dies on a regular basis, and it's always something bizarre or grisly. How about her sister, Princess Cassie of San Cristobel?

SC: It's all ridiculous. So Cassie's a princess now?

JS: Yeah, you'll probably meet her at some official function. So, my friend Ezra wants to date you.

SC: Tell him thanks for the offer. It's funny. Now tha I'm Miss USA, these people are just coming out of th woodwork.

JS: Well, once you get a crown, does everyone want to go out with you?

SC: Absolutely! You know, even my little sister, wh goes to Central Catholic High School in Lawrenc says, "Susie, y'know all of a sudden, all the boys a saying how much I look like you, and if things don work out with my current boyfriend..." I'm like, "Jan those are the boys you stay away from."

JS: If you could be one of Barker's Beauties on The Price Is Right, would that be your dream job?

SC: Well, not my dream job, exactly, but I think would be fun to do it once.

JS: Last question: Would you rather wear blue jeans or a evening gown?

SC: Jeans. I love evening gowns, though. I love th glitz and the glamour. I'm a shimmerista. The mo sparkly the better. IB

Using superlatives is a tricky business. By definition, a superlative is subjective and therefore open for debate. That's why, to avoid sounding opinionated, many people hedge their bets with qualifiers like "arguably," "possibly" or "conceivably" before venturing to dub something the "-est."

Not us. We're bolder than that. Surer. More emphatic. In declaring our annual list of Boston's cream-of-the-crop offerings—including food, drink, entertainment, health and beauty, sports, media and more—we throw caution to the wind, call 'em like we see 'em, and stand by our choices.

Which is to say that we know you won't necessarily agree with all of them.

Everyone's entitled to his or her own opinion.

You're also entitled to ours.

But lest we seem like a bunch of high-handed know-it-alls who arbitrarily cobble this issue together over cocktails and bar snacks, let us assure you that the process is much more sophisticated than that. In fact, it's borderline scientific, and more than a little fabulous, to boot.

It starts with a really great dinner party, which we threw this year at UpStairs on the Square (see Best Restaurant Reincarnation). Scouring our personal digital assistants and the piles of business cards that collect in the folds of our wallets, we assemble an eclectic group of movers and shakers to serve as judges. Before dinner, we ply them with cocktails and hors d'oeuvres, and by the time everyone sits down to eat, their lips are loose and their tongues are wagging freely.

This year, the judges included the following:

Steve Almond, fiction scribe; Peter Blute, talk radio pundit; Cynthia Breazeal, MIT professor; Mariellen Burns, Boston Police Department director of media relations; Chris Collins, NECN sports anchor; Mary-Catherine Deibel, co-owner of UpStairs on the Square; Naamua Delaney, FOX25 lifestyle and entertainment reporter; Olivia Disch English, restaurant owner/namesake and fashion plate; Terri Fuentes, host of Univision's Pachanga Latina; Helen Greiner, co-founder and president of iRobot; Joe Hanley, attorney with the firm McDermott, Quilty, & Miller; Kay Hanley, former Letters to Cleo frontwoman and rockin' mom; Carlos Hidalgo, co-owner and manager of Bomboa; Deborah Hughes, co-owner of UpStairs on the Square; Kelly Malone, morning personality at Mix 98.5; Catherine McLaughlin, executive director of the Institute of Politics at the Kennedy School of Government; Ioannis Miaoulis, the new president and director of the Museum of Science; Katherine Morse, owner of the Flat of the Hill; Pat Moscaritolo, president and CEO of the Greater Boston Convention and Visitors Bureau; Tony Nunziante, marketing manager for the city's Special Events Office; Esti Parsons, co-owner and general manager of Radius; Patrick Petty, wardrobe stylist for House of Culture; Jeff Poulos, executive director of StageSource; Bryan Quilliams, concierge at the Ritz-Carlton Boston Common; Collette Royer, general manager of Giorgio Armani; and Karen Holmes Ward, director of public affairs and community services and host/producer of CityLine on WCVB; as well as assorted members of the IB staff.

Next comes the grunt work. After our crack team of interns collects the judges' ballots and tallies their votes, our in-house experts (a.k.a. the IMPROPER staff) review the results, check the facts, and conduct even more research where the results are cloudy. Finally, the list takes shape, and we declare the winners.

It's an imperfect system, we grant you. But we do our level best to present unbiased, democratically determined results (for instance, discounting a judge's vote when there's a question of a conflict of interest).

We hope you find this list informative, helpful and thought-provoking. But most of all, enjoyable. IB

FOOD & drink

BAGELS

Kupel's Bakery

421 Harvard St., Brookline; 617-566-9528

Not all bagels are created equal, and success with other O-shaped food items made of dough does not necessarily qualify one to make this Jewish specialty. The bagel bakers at this Brookline institution know what they're about, producing 22 varieties that range from the traditional (sesame, poppy, onion) to nouvelle (cinnamon-glazed, blueberry and sun-dried tomato). Their latest, called the Elvis, has banana and peanut butter baked into it, and they recommend eating it with just a schmear of butter or honey-walnut spread. All their bagels are made fresh daily, and Kupel's mind-boggling selection of more than 20 spreads includes flavors like lox, chive, green olive pesto, dill horseradish, raisin walnut and a lactose-free, tofu-based alternative. Your Bubbe would plotz.

BAKERY, BREADS

Iggy's Bread of the World

205 Arlington St., Watertown; 617-924-0949;
5 Pleasant St., Marblehead; 781-639-4717;
www.iggysbread.com

Some things in life, like sex and soufflés, turn out better when done slowly. Bread is another. This outstanding bakery (which supplies many of Boston's top restaurants) uses less yeast and allows its breads to rise naturally for nine to 16 hours, giving them a deeper, richer taste. The brains behind the operation, Igor and Ludmilla Ivanovic, use nothing but the finest all-natural—and whenever possible, organic—ingredients. Their four basic "breads of the world" are country sourdough, whole wheat sourdough, Francese and seedless white rye, but they also produce varieties like seven-grain health and raisin-pecan, as well as traditional French baguettes, focaccias and pizzas. If Watertown is too much of a schlep, Iggy's sells its breads at numerous shops and bakeries, like Whole Foods Market. Either way, it's worth the trip and worth the price.

BAR FOOD

Audubon Circle Restaurant & Bar

838 Beacon St., Boston; 617-421-1910

Not exactly in the thick of things (it's near Kenmore Square, but not really in it), this funky little bar and grill boasts some of the simplest and most delicious vittles of any bar in Boston. Almost everything is grilled, from the burgers and quesadillas to the Tuscan bread appetizer served with a white-bean paste and the tuna steak accompanied by banana salsa. Other favorites include excellent pot-stickers and an apple and brie sandwich that's to die for. A house-made condiment using tomatoes and chipotle peppers brings to mind an artisanal barbecue sauce, but this unpretentious place is too down-to-earth to call it anything but ketchup. Proof that good doesn't have to mean fussy.

BARBECUE

Blue Ribbon BBQ

1375 Washington St., Newton; 617-332-2583;
908 Mass. Ave., Arlington; 781-648-7427; www.blueribbonbbq.com

This is the closest you'll get to real Memphis dry-rubbed ribs, North Carolina pulled pork or Texas-style brisket without actually decamping for Dixie. The meats are all slow-cooked and wood-smoked, the way they do it down South, and the scrumptious side dishes include chunky garlic mashed potatoes, peppery kale soup, tangy collard greens and creamy sweet-potato pie and cornbread. Blue Ribbon even serves up smoked fish for those who can't handle all that red meat. The service isn't fancy (either take-out or paper and plastic), the food is messy, and the space is a tad small and cluttered, but the mood is upbeat and the prices are as down-home as the homemade tea and lemonade. A Feedbag for Four (which includes ribs, a pint of pulled pork, chicken, baked beans, cornbread, cole slaw and all the other fixings) is $44.95, making it an excellent option for feeding a large group of big eaters at a moment's notice.

BEST-KEPT SECRET

Carmen Quagliata at the Vault

105 Water St., Liberty Square, Boston;
617-292-9966

This gem of a restaurant in the Financial District has struggled to define itself through a succession of chefs, but co-owner Brian O'Neill has finally hit upon a winning formula with his new partner. Up-and-coming chef Carmen Quagliata has worked at Tra Vigne in Napa Valley and Felidia in New York, and his cooking reflects a dedication to the three central tenets of Italian cuisine: use the best ingredients available, celebrate the seasons, and know when to stop. His mouth-watering menu includes such inventive creations as seared octopus salad with Jim Cook potatoes and red wine vinaigrette, Pecorino budino with sun gold tomatoes, and yellowfin tuna arrabiata. Eschewing obsessively decorative garnishes and architectural presentations, Quagliata makes food that's as simple and unpretentious as it is delicious. While all the food snobs wait three weeks for a reservation at the hot spot du jour, diners at the Vault are eating some of the best food in town, minus all the hype and the endless wait for a table.

BRUNCH

Henrietta's Table

1 Bennett St., Cambridge; 617-661-5005;
www.charleshotel.com

No meal is more civilized than a proper Sunday brunch, and no one does Sunday brunch better than this restaurant, which is reminiscent of a New England farmhouse kitchen. Customers enter through a market selling fruits, jam and other offerings from local farmers. The mission-style tables are set with white linens and simple china in a spacious, sunny room permeated by tempting smells coming from the open kitchen. The $35-$39 prix fixe buffet includes the usual fare (eggs Benedict, waffles, omelets, sausage and bacon) as well as some unexpected but welcome surprises (oysters, artisanal cheeses, pasta and a different carving each week). Whether you're coming from church or straight from an after-hours party, it's worth the trip to Harvard Square on a Sunday morning.

BURGER

R. F. O'Sullivan's

282 Beacon St., Somerville; 617-492-7773;
www.rfosullivan.com

This typically loud, smoky, no-B.S. neighborhood bar just happens to specialize in that most basic and American of culinary creations: the hamburger. O'Sullivan's burgers weigh eight ounces (or half a pound) and are more than two inches thick, which makes it a challenge to open your mouth wide enough to take a bite. Once you do, though, you'll see why we've singled them out. The 30 variations on the theme include the Cape Codder (with avocado and Swiss cheese), the Mexican (served with fresh salsa and mozzarella and heated tortilla shells in between the buns), the North Ender (with tomato sauce and mozzarella) and the Blackjack (made with Cajun spices in the ground beef and served with a tangy Creole mayo and melted cheese). But our favorite is the Black and Blue, featuring fresh black pepper and a creamy bleu cheese dressing, served with onion rings and french fries. Best of all, this is one of the few places where you can actually order your burger rare. Ronald McWho?

BURRITOS

Anna's Taqueria

1412 Beacon St., Brookline; 617-739-7300;
446 Harvard St., Brookline; 617-277-7111;
822 Somerville Ave., Cambridge; 617-661-8500;
236A Elm St., Somerville; 617-666-3900

Even when a burrito is bad, it's still pretty good. However, the hands-down best are to be found at this ever-expanding chain. Perhaps the only place you can order and re

SUSHI

Osushi

10 Huntington Ave., Boston; 617-266-2788;
www.osushirestaurant.com

According to one self-described "sushi whore," this studiously groovy little place just outside the Westin Hotel lobby is the best thing to happen to Boston in eons. The authentic but snazzy menu features consistently excellent fish and assorted other Japanese delicacies, making it accessible for the maven and the neophyte alike. Diners at the sushi bar can watch the hypnotic performance as sushi chefs construct edible works of art, while the modern, sexy dining room has become a favorite dating spot for the young, good-looking and fashionable set. Large windows overlook a bustling street scene one story below, while a soundtrack of the latest in lounge music lends a clubby but comfortable vibe. But it's the food that really stands out. Anyone with a yen for superb and superbly prepared sushi is bound to become a regular.

ceive a well-rounded meal in under a minute, the lines still snake out the door, a testament to the quality of the food. A regular burrito includes meat, beans and salsa, while a super burrito adds cheese and rice to the masterpiece. Grilled chicken, pork, steak, chili verde, and grilled vegetables round out the impressive array of toppings. The flour tortillas are steamed to perfection before being used for burritos. To top it all off, the prices are low too: The super burrito is a mere $3.94.

CAPPUCCINO

Caffe Vittoria

294 Hanover St., Boston; 617-227-7606

Long before Starbucks inspired fast-food joints and doughnut shops to begin offering coffee topped with steamed milk, this Old-World, family-owned North End café was serving cappuccino they way they do in Italy: strong, hot and without a big production. A crowd usually comes right after dinner, since most North End restaurants are small and will hurry diners out after they eat, but a second wave arrives later at night. Then there are the regulars who never leave and who add a bit of local color to an already vibrant atmosphere. An outstanding place to take a date, especially if he or she doesn't drink, it's like stopping at a café in Sicily, except everyone speaks English.

CASUAL DINING

Rustic Kitchen

200 Quincy Market, Boston; 617-523-6334

With all the excellent restaurants in Boston, it seems a bit churlish to lament the lack of laid-back casual options, and one that's overlooked is this standout in Faneuil Hall. Relatively new in the kitchen, chef Bill Bradley—who earned accolades at both Bricco and Carmen in the North End—keeps things simple and satisfying, with a menu that boasts such items as white grape and cucumber gazpacho, veal osso bucco with parsnip puree, pizza, and macaroni and cheese. Pasta and breads are made in-house, and the long narrow dining room (with the wood-fired oven in the middle) extends to an outdoor patio. In the midst of all the Disney-fied, touristy schlock of Faneuil Hall, Rustic Kitchen offers really good food at reasonable prices.

CHEAP BREAKFAST

The Paramount

44 Charles St., Boston; 617-720-1152

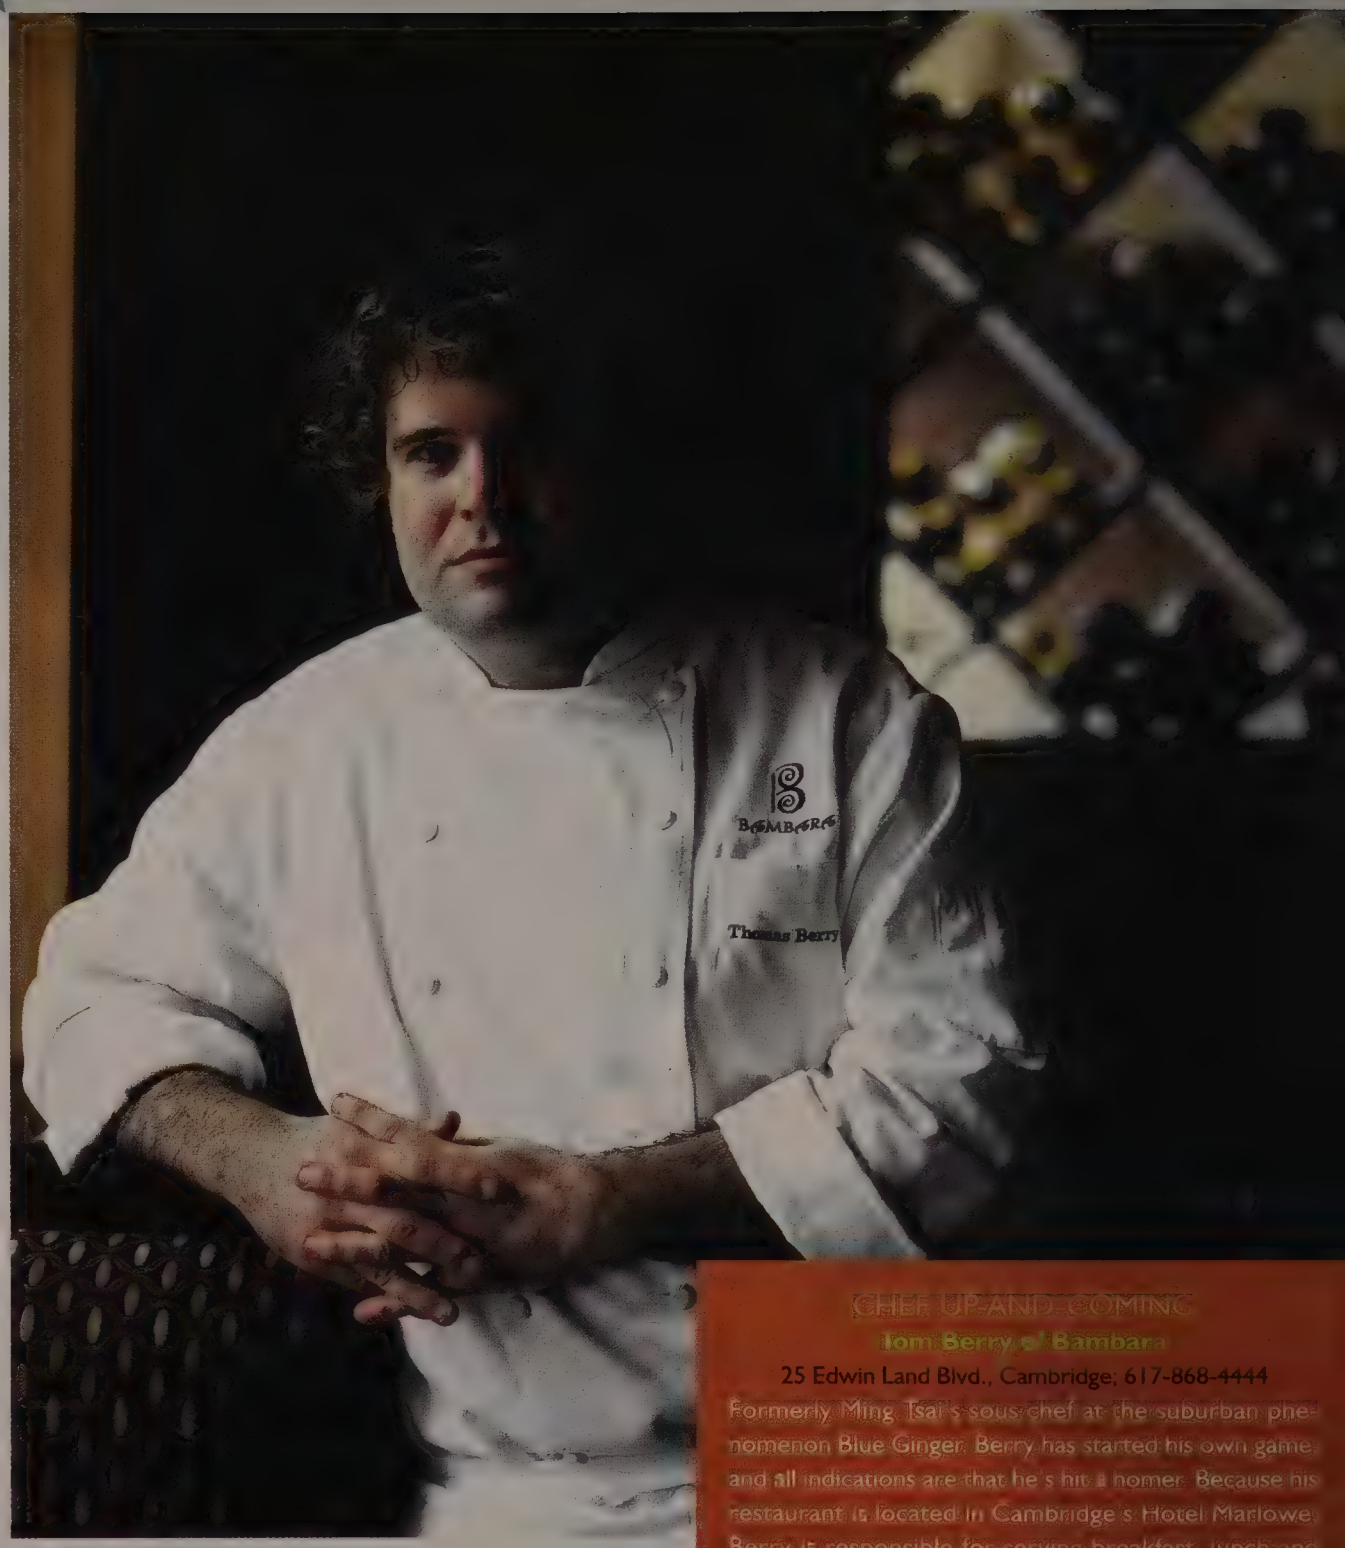
Surrounded by chichi little shops on one of the most picturesque streets in the city, this utilitarian little restaurant serves up the usual (eggs, pancakes, French toast, omelets) at unusually low prices. Nothing on the menu costs more than $7.50, and the homemade banana bread alone is worth twice that. Not surprisingly, there's a line out the door on weekends, and the dress code leans toward sweatpants and Red Sox caps. In other words, if Beacon Hill were a college dorm, this would be the dining hall. Makes you wonder why the same breakfast, only not as good and without any of the charm, is so much more expensive everywhere else.

CHEAP EATS

Flux

1 Appleton St., Boston; 617-695-3589;
www.fluxboston.com

Reaction to both the food and decor of this latest addition to the South End dining scene has been mixed. Some people don't like the spare, white and brown design, and others complain that it's not as inexpensive as everyone says. It's our guess that the former are intimidated by minimalism, while the latter are just plain cheap. The most pricey thing on the menu, at $12, is a delicious French-cut teriyaki pork chop, while $11 buys you the wildly popular turkey meatloaf. Nothing on the wine list is north of $30, while the martinis, which have lately become stupidly expensive everywhere else, are all under $10. Flux's willingness to continually tweak the menu is a sign that things will go from good to great. It's the epitome of an up-tempo neighborhood place, and the fact that management donates the space, food and drinks to host a different nonprofit on the first Tuesday of every month shows they know how to be good neighbors.



CHEF UP-AND-COMING

Tom Berry of Bambara

25 Edwin Land Blvd., Cambridge; 617-868-4444

Formerly Ming Tsai's sous chef at the suburban phenomenon Blue Ginger, Berry has started his own game, and all indications are that he's hit a homer. Because his restaurant is located in Cambridge's Hotel Marlowe, Berry is responsible for serving breakfast, lunch and dinner to guests, as well as room service and catering for functions, but by all accounts, he's more than up for the challenge. Maybe that's a result of years he spent doing recipe development and menu testing for Ming Tsai's books and TV show, and the fact that he's worked with such kitchen gods as Jean-Georges Vongerichten, Nobu Matsuhisa and Jean Louis Palladin. Whatever the reason, the guy's obviously gifted, and his restaurant is sure to become one of the most talked about in an ever-expanding and oversaturated market. We predict it's only a matter of time before the Food Network is knocking on his door.

CHINESE RESTAURANT

New Shanghai Restaurant

21 Hudson St., Boston; 617-338-6688

This is where foodies and celebrity chefs (like Michael Schlow and Ken Oringer) come to eat in Chinatown. Chef C.K. Sau, who formerly worked as executive chef at Sally Ling's, specializes in Shanghai and Cantonese cuisine, with an emphasis on seafood. The menu includes standards like crispy whole fish and Peking duck, as well as more obscure Chinese delicacies like grilled sea bass with Shanghai sauce. Unlike all those dragon palaces where deep-fried everything floats in sweet pink goo, New Shanghai serves authentic Chinese food made from the freshest and best ingredients, and Sau doesn't mask his dishes in heavy sauces. For the real deal, come here.

CLAM CHOWDER

Legal Sea Foods

Many locations;
www.legalseafoods.com

For years, we've wondered how this wildly popular seafood chain has managed to perfect the quintessential New England soup. The broth is thick without being gloppy; the clams are sweet and never rubbery; and the potatoes are soft without being mushy. In short, it's the ultimate chowder, so good that several presidents have seen fit to serve it at their inaugurations. From Legal's waterfront location all the way to the suburbs, this is darn good chowda.

COFFEE SHOP

Cafe Pamplona

12 Bow St., Cambridge; 617-547-2763

This Cambridge institution has been open for 45 years and is the next best thing to a corner café in Salamanca. In addition to strong coffee and delectable pastries, there's an assortment of soups and pressed sandwiches like gazpacho, sopa de ajo (garlic soup) in the winter, and the Pamplona special (essentially a Cubano made with roast pork, ham, pickles and cheese). The clientele leans heavily toward Harvard students and professors, which means that the conversation is highly cerebral and the closest anyone comes to making a fashion statement is accessorizing with a dog-eared copy of Gödel, Escher & Bach. With its cozy, subterranean atmosphere, this is an ideal place to kill an hour or three.

COMFORT FOOD

Silvertone Bar and Grill

69 Bromfield St., Boston; 617-338-7887

Donna Reed, June Cleaver and all those other 1950s housewives would be green with envy. The food at this subterranean Ladder District hot spot is a throwback to the days when calories and cholesterol weren't something people worried about, and dinner meant warm, hearty and delicious food. Meatloaf and macaroni and cheese are two of the standouts, but the pork chops or steak tips will satisfy the hungriest carnivore, while lighter fare, like fish of the day or a green salad, is ideal for anyone trying to watch their weight. Old-fashioned, no-nonsense cooking just like your Mom used to make, if you were lucky.

DELI

Rubin's Kosher Restaurant Delicatessen

www.rubinskosher.com

You don't need to keep kosher to enjoy the closest thing to a New York deli this side of Manhattan. This traditional Jewish deli serves exceptional renditions of classics like matzo ball soup, extra lean corned beef, brisket, knishes, lox and bagels, and chopped liver. Everything is prepared on the premises, and the circa 1965 decor gives the place a kitsch appeal. Because it's certified kosher—which means the quality of the food and the way it's prepared are held to higher standards—the prices might seem a bit steep, but the portions are enormous. In fact, the last time we went, we took home enough leftovers to last the rest of the week. As our Bubbe used to say, "Esst, meine Kinder."

DESSERT

Finale

1 Columbus Ave., Park Square, Boston; 617-423-3184;

30 Dunster St., Cambridge; 617-441-9797;

www.finaledesserts.com

Anyone with a sweet tooth will think they've died and gone to heaven. In 1998, this chic little desserterie and bakery opened, operating on the bold idea of serving nothing but the final (and our favorite) course. Naysayers predicted it wouldn't survive. Five years later, it expanded to a second location. The menu has something to tempt everyone, although the two signature desserts are a crème brûlée that defies description and molten chocolate, a baked-to-order chocolate cake with a gooey center served with coffee ice cream and chocolate-covered almonds. Tilted mirrors mounted on the ceiling give patrons a view of what the chefs are up to, which also makes it the Best Place to Indulge Your Secret Fetish for Food Porn.

DIM SUM

China Pearl

9 Tyler St., Boston; 617-426-4338;

www.chinapearlrestaurant.com

China Pearl's extensive dim sum selection excels, a fact that's obvious from the number of Chinese families who go there every weekend. Seating is communal, so unless you're up for eating with strangers, come with a group of friends, which also makes it easier to share lots of different dishes. Since most of the waiters speak little English, it's best just to graze randomly from the passing carts. Each of the little steam trays—which contain everything from spare ribs, chicken claws and pork buns to mushrooms, vegetables and custard egg tarts—are $2.25-$4.95, meaning that you might go home with a few bills left in your wallet. A weekend getaway to the Orient without the hassle of packing a suitcase.

DINER

Deluxe Town Diner

627 Mount Auburn St., Watertown; 617-926-8400;

www.deluxetowndiner.com

If there's such a thing as "fine dinering," this is it. Open from 6 am to 10 pm seven days a week, this authentic old-school diner (it was built in 1947, but there's been a diner on the site since the '30s) serves hearty fare with flair. Moreover, everything is made from scratch. The menu regularly changes, although one constant is the drool-worthy pancakes, which include flapjacks made with sour cream and buttermilk, ployes (buckwheat pancakes wth no butter or oil), New Orleans sweet-potato pancakes, New York–style potato pancakes and Rhode Island johnnycakes made with www.radiusrestaurant.com

Walking through the door is like walking onto a stage set for a modern remake of Dinner at Eight or some other sophisticated 1930s screwball comedy. The circular dining room is among the most dramatic and exciting rooms in Boston, while the chic, high-powered bar scene offers a less structured setting for celebrations. Chef Michael Schlow's award-winning food is pricey but worth every penny. There's also a communal table where lone diners can join a consistently colorful, rotating cast of urbane hipsters, along with private dining rooms appropriate for swanky dinner parties. The proximity to the Financial District means that lots of lawyers, investment bankers and other expense-account types take power lunches or dinner here, but everyone else will feel welcome and well-looked-after by a staff that's unsurpassed by any other we've ever seen.

stone-ground corn meal. A full stack is $6, while a short stack is $4.50, making this one of the few places where someone with the appetite of a field hand can fill up for under $10. The quality of the food, not to mention special events like an evening with cookbook author Laura Brody, are of a caliber typically associated with fancier places, but it's as genuine and down-to-earth as a diner gets.

DINNER WITH LIVE MUSIC

Les Zygomates

129 South St., Boston; 617-542-5108;
www.leszygomates.com

Chef-owner Ian Just's cooking is reason enough to seek out this Leather District restaurant specializing in traditional French bistro fare. Add to that the outstanding live jazz acts that appear six nights a week, and it's easy to see why sophisticates and cognoscenti dine there in droves. The pâté is made in-house, the steak frites are magnifique and the pan-roasted veal sweetbreads are as good as at any restaurant in France. And all the while, some of the most talented jazz musicians in Boston serenade you at a decibel level that won't spoil the conversation at your table. The French are great at two things: food and jazz. Les Zygomates has both of them covered.

FRENCH RESTAURANT

Troquet

140 Boylston St., Boston; 617-695-9463

Troquet offers proof that a French restaurant need not be snotty or a Disney-esque replica of a brasserie or a bistro. Overlooking the Common in a pleasant space decorated in a muted palette of grays, green and black, this intimate spot is understated and underrated. The focus is on pairing wine and foods: The menu lists 47 wines by the glass, printed in a column down the center, with appropriate choices of appetizers on the left and entrées on the right. This is especially good news for anyone who gets intimidated when confronted by a wine list. As for the food, appetizers like braised-short-rib cannelloni with smoked bacon and aromatic vegetables, and main courses like roasted suckling pig with sweet potatoes, golden raisins and endive marmalade, are innovative in conception and execution. True French style without all that Gallic jackasserie.

HEALTHY RESTAURANT

The Hi Protein Lo Fat Know Fat Grille & Café

222 Arsenal St., Watertown; 617-923-7676

This place is ideal for anyone on Weight Watchers who doesn't want to O.D. on cholesterol. The casual dine-in or takeout menu consists of sandwiches, wraps and dinner plates, all assiduously low in fat. The extensive vegetarian offerings include health food staples such as tofu, tabbouleh, hummus and garden burgers, but the good news is that much of the menu puts a health-food spin on often-forbidden fare. The all-white chicken meatball wrap is a best-seller, as are the steak-tip wrap and the low-fat burger. All sandwiches and wraps come with low-fat "air fries," which are baked instead of fried. Fruit smoothies and soy protein smoothies are like a meal in a glass, and the low-fat, high-protein brownies and cookies are tastier than they sound. The cult-like clientele tends to be intimidatingly fit, which also makes this the Best Place to Meet a Health Nut with One Percent Body Fat.

ICE CREAM

Christina's Homemade Ice Cream

1255 Cambridge St., Cambridge; 617-492-7021

We've never met an ice cream parlor we didn't like. That said, this Cambridge spot is tops. The ingredients are all-natural, and the 40-plus flavors range from the everyday to the outlandish. Signature offerings include burnt sugar, Wild Turkey bourbon and walnut, coconut Butterfinger, and white coffee mocha flake. For the fat phobic, Christina's also has frozen yogurt, usually about six varieties. It does a brisk wholesale business, selling to several hundred local restaurants, and special requests from chefs often result in new flavors. Christina's recently opened a spice shop next door carrying upwards of 200 spices and herbs from around the world, as well as numerous varieties of dried mushrooms, rice, tea, beans, lentils, chocolate and chilis. We'll take that as proof of the lengths they'll go to for just the right ingredient. In short, this is ice cream for the connoisseur.

INDIAN RESTAURANT

Diva

246 Elm St., Somerville; 617-629-4963;
www.divabistro.com

When you're craving curry or hankering for vindaloo, nothing else will do, and while there's a surfeit of serviceable Indian restaurants around (especially in Cambridge, where it seems like there's one on every corner), our favorite is this little family place in Davis Square. Everything is done the way it would be in Bombay: nan and other breads come first, followed by rice and the entrées of beef, lamb, chicken, vegetables and so on, beautifully prepared and as authentically spicy as you request it. In other words, Diva doesn't tone down the food for an American palate unless you ask. Even more refreshing than the food is the pace; diners are wonderfully looked after but never rushed, adding to the sensation that you've been transported to the subcontinent. Who knew the flavors of India could be found in mysterious, exotic Somerville?

ITALIAN RESTAURANT

Bricco

241 Hanover St., Boston; 617-248-6800;
www.bricco.com

"Bricco" refers to the lush grapes adorning the hillside vineyards of Italy, and is an apt name for this North End eatery that ranked in Bon Appétit's top 10 Italian restaurants in the country. Marisa Iocco and Rita D'Angelo, former owners of Galleria Italiana—returned from a six-month sojourn in Italy—recently took over the front and back of the house at Bricco and are wowing patrons with their inventive menu of classic Italian food with a cosmopolitan touch. Feast on such delicacies as crispy jumbo soft-shell crab enveloped in a golden, tempura-like batter, or the house-made ravioli with foie gras, Parmesan and artichokes, which combines an Italian staple with the richness of French paté. The menu also features a wide array of antipasti, ranging from classics like homemade mozzarella with fresh tomatoes, to the octopus carpaccio, served with jumbo New Zealand mussel salad. Manga!

LATE-NIGHT FOOD

News Restaurant & Lounge

150 Kneeland St., Boston, 617-426-6397;
www.newsboston.com

One of the most common complaints of Boston visitors who come from more nocturnally lively cities is the lack of late-night places to eat. Beyond Chinatown and fast food, they say, it's slim pickings. Well, now you can take your visiting guests to this Leather District eatery that's open until 4 am on weeknights and 5 am on Friday and Saturday. The restaurant's name is reflected in the selection of international newspapers and magazines available to patrons, as well as wireless Internet hookups and flat-screen TVs playing CNN and other news stations (without the sound). The enormous menu boasts 140 items, with sushi and steak tips among the most popular. Although it's worth checking out early in the evening, while the bar's still open, it's your best bet when the clubs have closed and everyone else has gone home to bed.

MARGARITA

Cactus Club Restaurant & Bar

939 Boylston St., Boston; 617-236-0200;
www.cactusclubboston.com

For some of us, the national libation of Mexico is serious business. Well tequila is a no-no, and bottled mixes are unthinkable. For the true connoisseur, the bar at this Back Bay restaurant has 25 different tequilas (including the exceedingly hard to find El Tesoro Paradiso), and the mix is made from a secret recipe using freshly squeezed juices. Among the most popular of the 17 signature varieties are the Horni Marg (Sauza Hornitos, Cointreau and a splash of fresh lime), and frozen varieties like raspberry, tangerine and Creamsicle. Several new ones will be added

50 Dalton St., Boston; 617-867-9955;
149 Alewife Parkway, Cambridge; 617-520-9500;
www.summershackrestaurant.com

Imagine a roadside clam shack off Route 24 somewhere near Buzzards Bay, owned and operated by one of America's greatest chefs (who's known specifically for his lobster), and you'll get an idea of what the Summer Shack is like. The folks at Summer Shack bill their raw bar as the largest in town, with eight to 10 varieties of oysters daily (some flown in from Washington state and British Columbia), two kinds of clams and rotating options that include shrimp, crab, lobster, tuna tartare and scallop ceviche. In the Back Bay location, which just opened in April, they've even built (and have a patent pending for) a refrigerated storage unit that holds up to 4,000 pieces of shellfish. All that's missing are the seagulls circling overhead and that whiff of low tide.

MEDITERRANEAN RESTAURANT

Oleana

134 Hampshire St., Cambridge; 617-661-0505

Oleana means "paradise," and it's the full name of co-owner Ana Sortun, who was nominated for this year's James Beard award for best chef in the Northeast. Sortun's Arabic Mediterranean menu also has hints of Italian and Spanish cooking. The ambience is laid-back and intimate, with stone walls and warm, muted earth tones. For authentic Mediterranean atmosphere, there's also alfresco dining on an outdoor patio. The food is as tastefully restrained as the decor, a delicate balance of intense flavors and heady spices. Between your first and last courses, you can enjoy a complete cruise of the Mediterranean without going any farther than Cambridge.

MEXICAN RESTAURANT

Tu Y Yo

858 Broadway, Somerville; 617-623-5411;
www.tuyyomexicanfonda.com

We'd all but given up trying to find a Mexican restaurant in Boston that wasn't all about salsa and chips and everything smothered in sour cream. Then we found this place. The owners are from Veracruz and the D.F. (Mexico City to you gringos), and the food is the real enchilada: clean, simple and healthy. The decor is Mexican at least as far as the colors are concerned: brown and yellow booths and a blue and white tile counter, with turn-of-the-century photos on the walls. But it's the food that makes this place worth a visit. Their sopes—traditional bite-sized morsels of masa stuffed with cheese or vegetables—are delicious, and seafood selections like pulpo pichirilo (a vinegary hash of octopus and black olives) and chile relleno de camaron (poblano pepper stuffed with shrimp and goat cheese and drizzled with red bell pepper sauce) reflect the rich and varied seafood tradition that's all but ignored by most Mexican restaurants. In fact, this place challenges long-held assumptions about what Mexican food is or isn't, which is why we love it. A selection of three sangrias available by the pitcher and a full array of Mexican beers complete the bill of fare. Good enough for tu y yo, and even for tu mama, tambien.

GREEK RESTAURANT

Dionysos

777 Memorial Drive, Cambridge; 617-661-6800

Appropriately named for the god of wine and celebration, this Mediterranean gem overlooking the Charles River on the second floor of the Radisson Hotel has hosted the mayor of Athens and numerous celebrities of Greek descent. The attraction is Greek delicacies just like Mom used to make, assuming your Mom was born and raised in Athens. The lamb kleftiko is slow-cooked in a clay pot for many hours, while the handmade dolmades (grape leaves) are lovingly stuffed with rice and seasonings. Our favorite, though, is the shrimp saganaki, cooked with tomato sauce and spices, topped with feta cheese and baked. It brings us back to that summer between freshman and sophomore year that we spent on the beach in Skiathos pretending to study the classics. If you've got a big fat appetite for Greek food, this is the place to satisfy it.

MIDDLE EASTERN/PERSIAN RESTAURANT

Lala Rokh

97 Mount Vernon St., Boston; 617-720-5511;
www.lalarokh.com

If you're looking for falafel, hummus or baba ghannouj, look elsewhere. The beyond-fabulous food and the ambient atmosphere at Lala Rokh provide the exotic experience that most of us are looking for in a Middle Eastern restaurant—but the cuisine is distinctly Persian. That means dishes like slow-cooked, marinated beef with basmati rice, and roasted eggplant with garlic, tomato and saffron. The owners, brother-and-sister team Babak Bina and Azita Bina-Seibel, cook with spices and ingredients that their mother brings back from her frequent travels to Iran, and the menu is based entirely upon old family recipes. (Apparently, the Bina family has been eating well for generations.) A recent redo spiffed up the decor, with artwork from the family's private collection, including 19th-century photos of Iran by two of the earliest Persian photographers. Lala Rokh pays further homage to Persian culture with several champagne cocktails named after famous poets, and the owners plan to start hosting semi-regular evenings where patrons can bring their favorite poetry (Persian or otherwise) to recite over cocktails and hors d'oeuvres. A Muslim cleric might not approve, but we think that sounds like a heavenly evening.

NACHOS

Coolidge Corner Clubhouse

307-309 Harvard St., Brookline; 617-566-4948

This ubiquitous bar snack gets no respect, existing in the culinary twilight between Super Bowl parties and pubs where there are no other food options. However, this Brookline haunt brings the disrespected and lowly nacho to new levels. Instead of the amorphous blob of cholesterol that most places offer, you get a huge serving of crisp chips loaded with tons of freshly prepared toppings, including sour cream, guacamole, jalapeños, salsa and even chili. And we do mean a huge serving. A half order easily serves three or four people while the full portion is enough to satisfy six, which makes it the ideal appetizer to share while staving off the predinner munchies or staring blankly at the game on TV. The rest of the Clubhouse's pub grub is just as good, but be forewarned: Combined with the beer you're liable to consume, one visit may up your pants size.

NEW CONCEPT

Peking Tom's Longtang Lounge

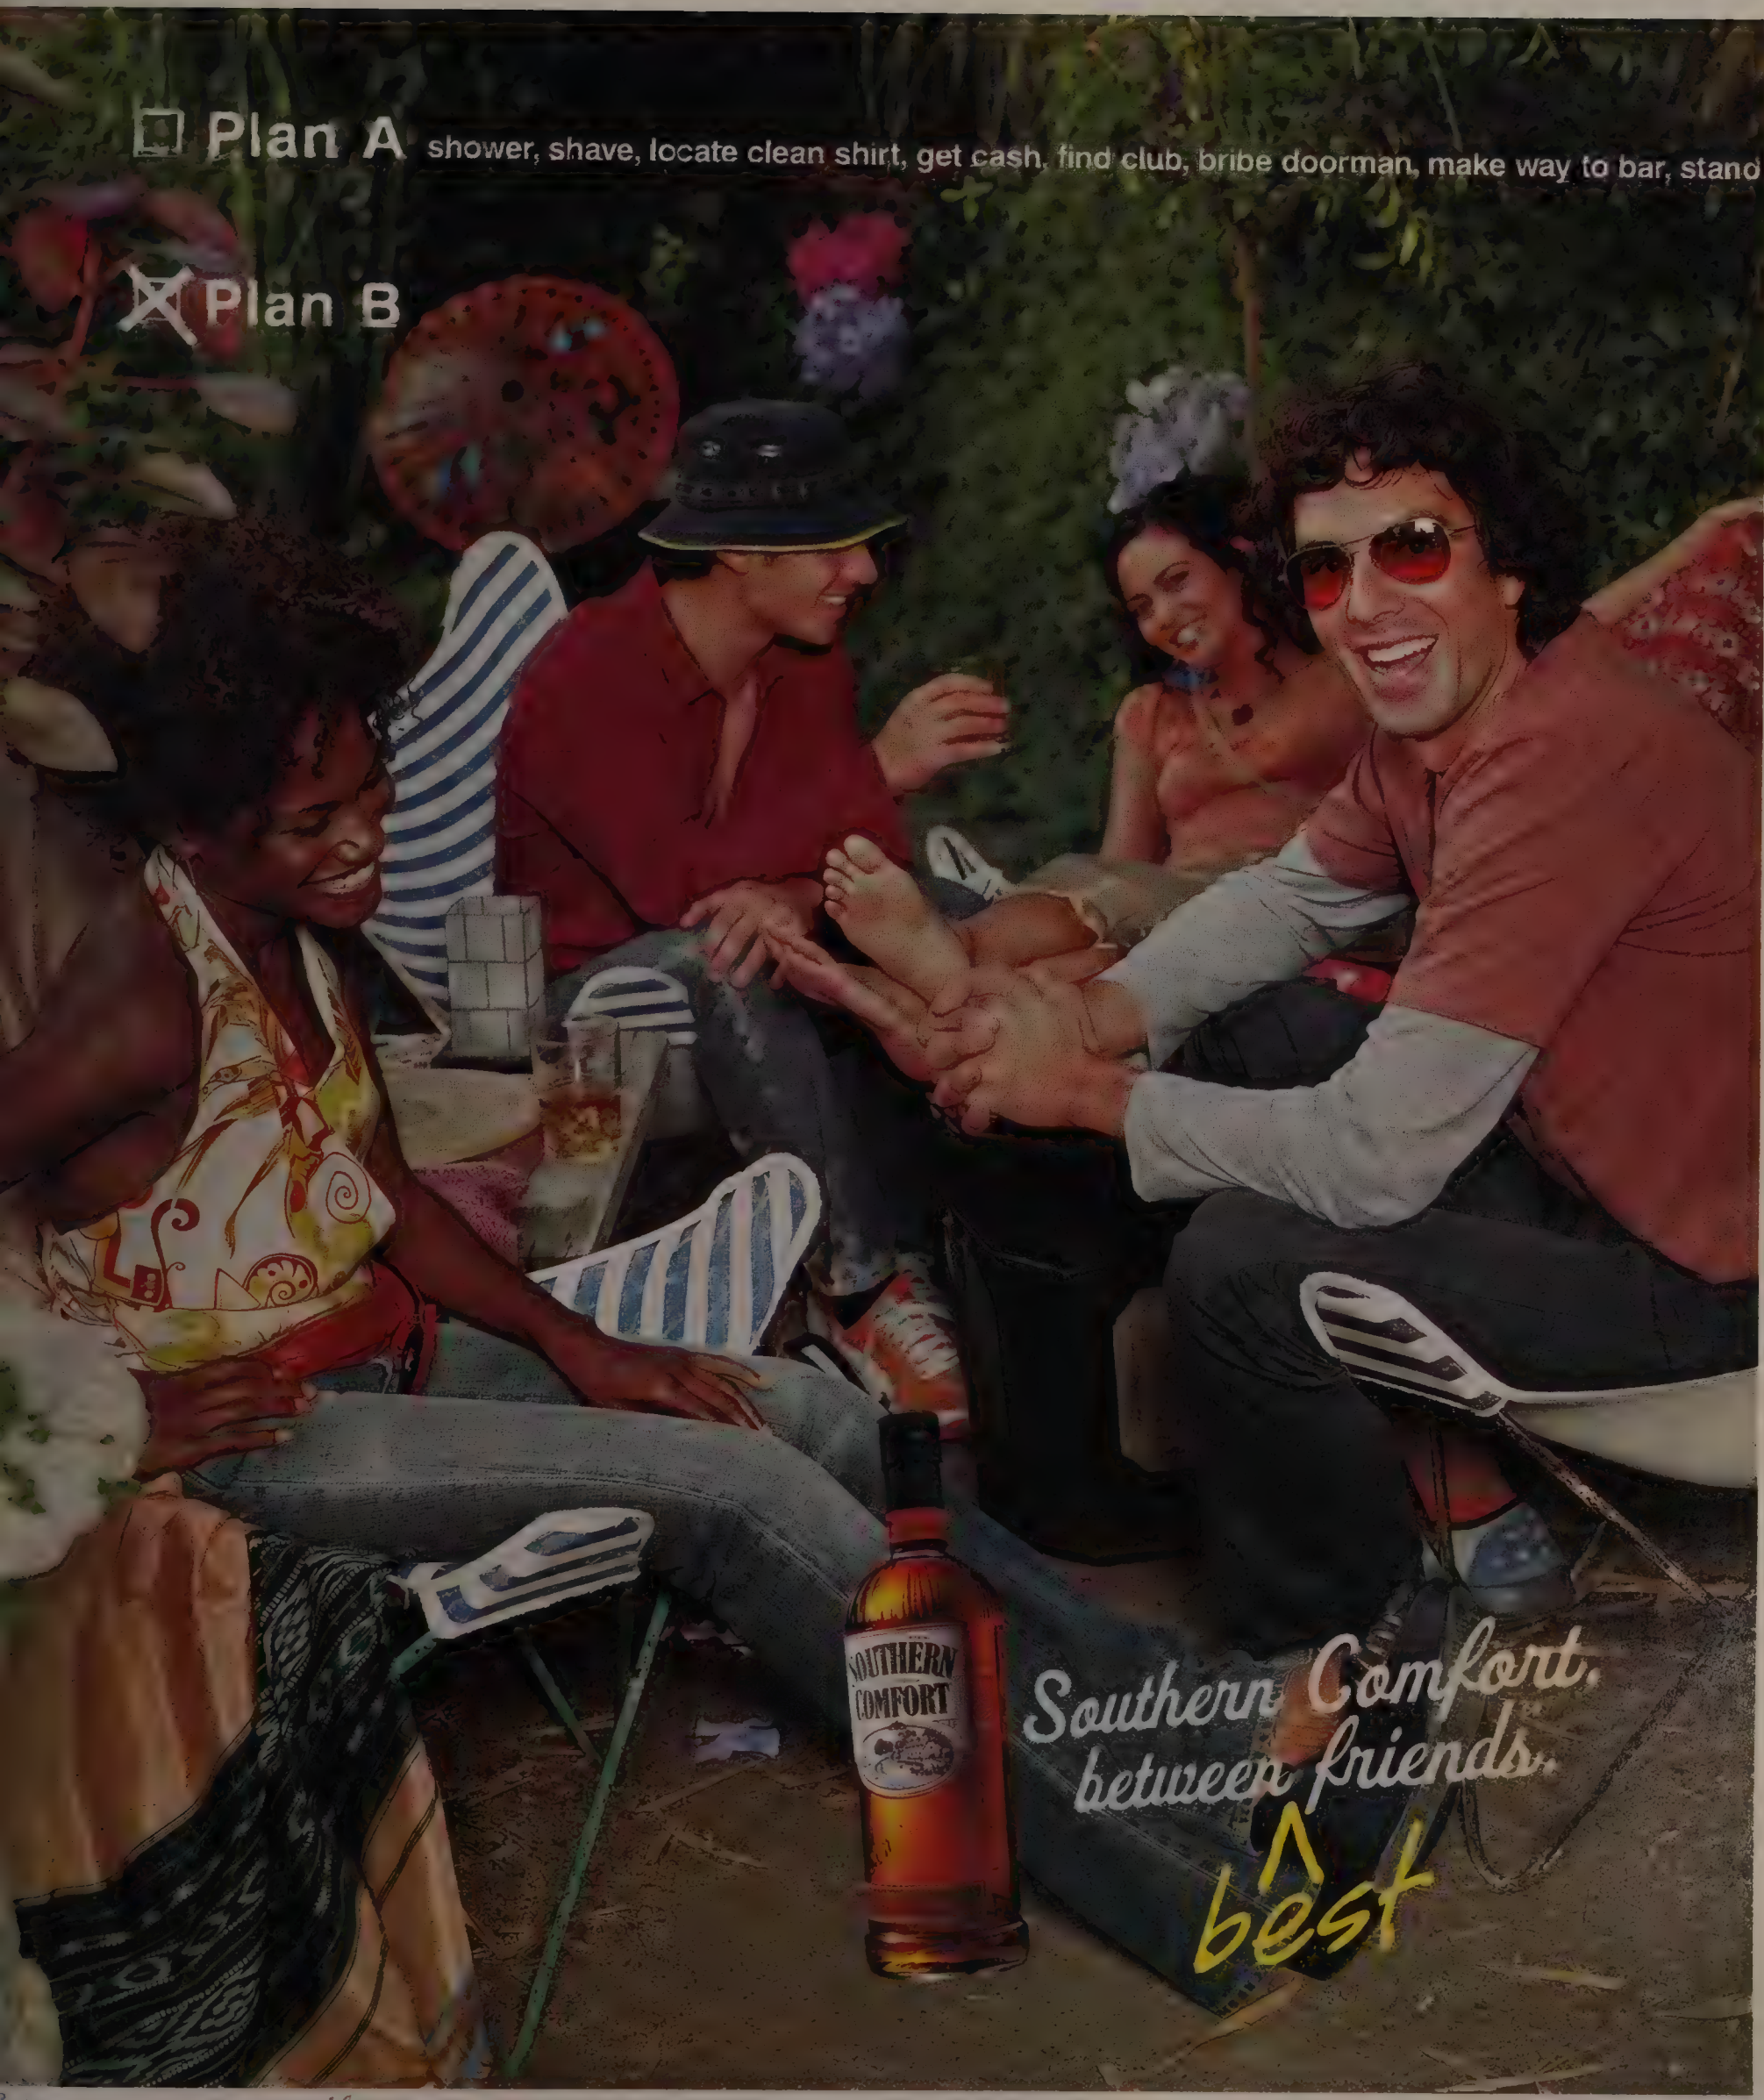
25 Kingston St., Boston; 617-482-6282;
www.pekingtom.com

A latter-day Trader Vic's with a boldly colored, contemporary decor that has enough kitsch touches to keep it from becoming too serious (in all the restrooms, for instance, introductory Chinese language tapes are piped in over the sound system and the walls are covered in Chinese newspapers). "Longtang" refers to the alleys in the Shanghai marketplace, an appropriate choice given the restaurant's two narrow rooms. The straightforward Cantonese menu (courtesy of executive chef Marc Orfaly, of Pigalle fame) includes such standouts as chicken and mango fried rice and "shrimp two ways." Polynesian cocktails are the equivalent of house wines, including such classics as the Mai Tai, Scorpion Bowl, Fogcutter, Zombie and our personal favorite, the aptly named Suffering Bastard, which contains bourbon, gin, ginger ale and lime. The cuisine of Chinatown served in a sexy setting, it's proof that Cantonese cooking doesn't have to be enjoyed in a cafeteria-like atmosphere.

NEW FOOD TREND

Bubble Tea

It took a while for this Asian fad to make it here from the West Coast, but we're glad it finally has. Also known as "black pearl tea," "pearl tea," "tapioca milk tea" or by its Asian name, pronounced "boba," it originated in Taiwan in the early 1990s. Cold black or green tea is mixed with milk and fruit-flavored syrup, and at the bottom of the glass are marble-sized balls of tapioca that look like bubbles (hence the name). Currently available at places like 88 Food Connection in Allston and Cassava on Boylston Street (and popping up at small Chinese restaurants around Boston), it's served in a clear glass to highlight its funky look and sipped through a straw wide enough to suck the tapioca balls through. Although it's called tea, the syrup makes it taste almost like juice. Flavors are endless and can include anything from strawberry to mango, passion fruit, pineapple, coffee, honeydew or peach, making it a nifty and novel alternative to your daily caffeine fix.



Enjoy your moment responsibly.

Among the assortment of cakes, cookies, brownies, bars, tarts and pies are Baby Brownies (small pans that serve 6 to 8) and such sinfully delicious confections as the Velvet Underground (= dark chocolate cake layered with fudge and frosted with vanilla butter cream). You can almost feel your thighs getting bigger the moment you walk through the door.

NEW HOTEL RESTAURANT

Spire at the Nine Zero Hotel

90 Tremont St., Boston; 617-772-0202;
www.ninezero.com/dining_events/spire.html

The space alone warrants a visit to this restaurant, named for its view of the steeple on top of the Park Street Church. The starkly chic interior has bamboo floors and lavender curtains so pale they're practically white, giving it an airy, Scandinavian feel that's as sophisticated as chef Jeffrey Everts' French-influenced cooking. Recently called "worth the splurge" by Bon Appétit, the food and wine list are on the pricey side, but the more casual bar menu offers such fare as stuffed calamari and a lobster sandwich. Ideal for after-work cocktails, a dinner date or a special occasion, it's the kind of place you used to have to go to New York to find.

NEW RESTAURANT

Excelsior

The Heritage on the Garden,
272 Boylston St., Boston; 617-426-7878;
www.excelsiorrestaurant.com

Perhaps the most eagerly awaited restaurant in the city's history, it's the latest brainchild of the incomparable Lydia Shire and replaces her legendary Biba, which redefined Boston's dining scene in the 1980s and paved the way for the proliferation of adventurous, chef-owned restaurants that continue to sprout up around the city. Few have a visionary of Shire's brilliance behind them, though, or a setting as magnificent as Excelsior's two floors overlooking the Public Garden. With partner Tim Lynch (of Grill 23 & Bar and Harvest) and designer Adam Tihany, Shire has created the kind of restaurant that makes diehard foodies swoon. The bar downstairs has a luxe, modern but classic aesthetic, with playful lighting and smart brown furniture with orange piping. Upstairs, an understated, elegant dining room seems to float like a sleek dirigible above Boylston Street. However, the visual centerpiece is a three-level glass wine tower with a 7,000-bottle capacity that houses the restaurant's 400-bottle-long wine list. Needless to say, the food defies description, and they've wisely kept old favorites like the lobster pizza on the menu. An instant classic.

ONE-STOP ASIAN

88 Food Connection

1095 Comm. Ave., Allston; 617-787-2288

You're jonesing for General Gau's chicken, but your friend has a yen for sashimi, and his date won't eat anything but bi bim bop. Where to go? This enormous food court in Allston has more than a half-dozen stalls offering the full gamut of Asian food, from Chinese, Japanese and Korean to Vietnamese, Thai and Indian. The low prices (around $5-$10 an entrée) make it a favorite for students, and the authentic food makes it popular among Asian families. A huge, warehouse-like room with the bustling atmosphere of a McDonald's in Shanghai, it's always loud and crowded, and the decor is limited to the small tables and chairs you might expect to see in a cafeteria. However, the vendors, not the ambience, are the draw. They serve all the familiar fare, as well as delicacies you've never heard of, and a few you might try only on a dare.

OUTDOOR DINING

Harvest

44 Brattle St., Cambridge; 617-868-2255;
www.the-harvest.com

Established in 1974, this Harvard Square institution has served as the springboard for some of the most notable names in the Boston restaurant scene. Under the same ownership as Grill 23 & Bar since 1998, Harvest's menu items change weekly, emphasizing local and seasonal specialties, and draws a loyal crowd of locals as well as the rich and famous. However, it's the tree-canopied garden terrace that's the hidden gem. Surrounded by four leafy lindens and a trellis-like fence, it's a lush bit of serenity smack in the middle of the hustle and bustle of busy Harvard Square. Adorned with floral boxes filled with herbs and seasonal flowers, which change often, its marble tables and comfy wrought-iron seats offer the ideal setting for sampling Harvest's famous lobster BLT and a selection from the 200-bottle wine list. And after the last chilly spring, you'll be glad to know that this garden oasis is warmed by gas-operated heaters.

OVERALL VALUE

The Franklin Café

278 Shawmut Ave., Boston; 617-350-0010

So much of going out to eat has become an exercise in remembering which celebrity chefs belong to which restaurants and striving to look like you just fell out of the pages of a fashion magazine. What ever happened to just going out for a bite to eat? Well, that tradition is alive in the South End, where this phenomenally popular neighborhood spot continues to crank out consistently great food at reasonable prices. With a full menu available until 1:30 am seven nights a week and an impressively affordable wine list, it's all about flexibility, and although there is frequently a wait for a table, the social yet unpretentious atmosphere turns the delay into a delight. In fact, you'll probably want to stay and hang out after you eat, too, since the bar scene is one of the most laid-back yet groovy in Boston.

MARTINI

Jer-Ne Restaurant & Bar

10 Avery St., Boston; 617-574-7100;
www.ritzcarlton.com/hotels/boston_common

Don't get us wrong. There's no more civilized place in the world to sip a classic cocktail than a window table overlooking the Public Garden in the bar at the old Ritz. However, the Ritz's sleeker sibling, the new Ritz Carlton, Boston Common, has several things going for it. The bar at Jer-Ne, one of the new Ritz's restaurants, is bigger, less stuffy and more comfortable for larger groups and relaxed get-togethers, while the style and service are up to the exacting standards you'd expect from a Ritz-Carlton. The martinis are flawless, and the bar's signature offering is the Neopolitan (a variation on the Cosmopolitan with raspberries and lime). Wall-to-wall windows prevent the dimly lit, sexy interior from feeling oppressive, and the menu of lighter fare is a delicious way to keep the drinks from going straight to your head. If the Sex and the City girls lived in Boston, this is where you'd find them.

PIZZA: ROMAN STYLE

Campo de Fiore

1352 Mass. Ave., Cambridge; 617-354-3805;
37 Center St., Weston; 781-893-6135

Pizza is a contentious issue, capable of causing serious disagreement between otherwise like-minded people. But if you're looking for pizza like you get in Italy, Campo de Fiore's crust will win you over: Italian flat-bread with crispy edges and a chewy center, it's the dough equivalent of al dente. While living in Rome, owners Isabelle Gamsohn and Bruno Galardi-Este fell in love with pane romano (Roman bread), recognizing it as the perfect base for thin-crust pizza. After conferring with some top Italian chefs, they imported their tasty concept to the United States, luckily for us, landing in Harvard Square. Five years later, lunch-hungry pizza lovers wait in lines that stretch down the Holyoke Arcade for a slice of this Roman manna, which comes in 25 different varieties. The numerous toppings include such options as fresh goat cheese, pesto and prosciutto, but our favorite is the Navona: squash, zucchini and mushrooms with a light, savory tomato sauce. Molto delicioso!

PIZZA: SPECIALTY

Paolo's Trattoria

251 Main St., Charlestown; 617-242-7229

For those of us who believe pizza to be the food of the gods, this place is a little slice of Mount Olympus. In fact all of the food at this tiny (48-seat) Italian joint is pretty good, but the specialty pizzas that come out of its wood-fired oven are especially mouth-watering. Greatest hits include their specialty pizza called Amore (scallops, crushed red pepper, spinach, mozzerella, romano, garlic and olive oil), Paolo's (mozzarella, peppers and kalamata olives) and the plain old margarita (mozzerella, Italian tomatoes, olive oil and fresh basil). The all-important crust is thin and crisp outside and chewy inside; there's a judicious amount of cheese; all the toppings are fresh; and the tomato sauce is the perfect balance between sweet and spicy. Worth the trip over the bridge to Charlestown.

PLEASANT SURPRISE

Houston's

60 State St., Boston; 617-573-9777;
www.houstons.com

Who knew there was such a thing as a cool bar and restaurant that was part of a national chain? Worth braving the Faneuil Hall crowds to check out, it's surprisingly hip and decidedly upscale. Everything on the menu—from the barbecue sauce to the banana cream pie—is made from scratch, and the bar concentrates on quality as well. Houston's even shuns flavored vodkas in its cocktails because they don't taste "pure" enough (Absolut Citron is the one exception). The design is spare but luxe: mahogany paneling, burgundy leather and lots of brass and cinderblocks, and all of the seating (except for the stools at the bar) is in booths, which gives the room a comfortable and intimate feel. The scene is mostly an after-work, upper-yuppie crowd who come for drinks or dinner, and the menu is varied enough to please even the most finicky eaters. Located on the site of the old Houlihan's, it's a far cry from a beer-and-buffalo-wings emporium and the least chain-like chain restaurant we've ever seen.

POWER BREAKFAST IN GYM CLOTHES

Blu Café at the Sports Club/LA

4 Avery St., Boston; 617-375-8550

Members at the city's fanciest gym tend to be the sort of go-getters who are so busy they need to combine work with working out. The café at this marble and glass temple to fitness, which many members have been heard to describe as "an urban country club," serves smoothies, breakfast burritos, fresh fruit juices, homemade granola and pastries (including low-fat varieties) to Boston's high and mighty, who either grab it and go or sit with the Wall Street Journal spread out on one of the summery picnic-style tables. On any given morning, the city's top CEOs, lawyers, bankers and entrepreneurs—along with the celebrity guests staying at the nearby Ritz—can be found ingesting their morning sustenance and getting their game face on. Taking a meeting while wearing workout gear is so L.A., even if the whole thing contradicts the age-old advice to "never let them see you sweat."

POWER LUNCH

Bristol Lounge

200 Boylston St., Boston; 617-338-4400;
www.fourseasons.com/boston/dining

Heavy-hitters from the business world tend to flock to the Four Seasons in every city around the world, and Boston is no exception. The comfortable and casual first-floor bar is the preferred spot for sussing out or sealing major deals, and any given weekday afternoon will find some of the most powerful people in the city quietly and discreetly conducting big business at one of the tables, which are spaced far enough apart to ensure privacy. Both the furniture (plush sofas and cushy chairs) and the food (with daily specials like meatloaf on Mondays, wiener schnitzel on Wednesdays, and fish and chips on Fridays) are homestyle. The more highfalutin can toast their success with Power Tea. This variation on English-style high tea brings a two-tiered tray topped with steak tartare, caviar, lobster salad, tempura and foie gras, and is usually enjoyed with a martini or a glass of champagne. Like catnip for fat cats, the Bristol Lounge is ground zero for big shots, plutocrats and influence brokers.

PRE-THEATER DINING

Teatro

177 Tremont St., Boston; 617-778-6841;
www.teatroboston.com

This seriously gorgeous restaurant overlooking the Boston Common is one of the most welcome additions to Boston's dining scene since baked beans. Scrumptious contemporary Italian fare by chef/owner Jamie Mammano and executive chef Robert Jean is served in a spectacular setting at shockingly reasonable prices (two can eat and drink well for under $100), making this an ideal date spot whether or not you're holding tickets to a movie, a play, the ballet or the opera. If you are headed to the nearby Theater District or the Loews Boston Common cinema, the restaurant's charming staff is sensitive to and accommodating about curtain times. But Teatro is so chic and lively that it's a performance all its own, and you may be tempted to stay all night.

The Sunset offers an eye-poppingly encyclopedic selection of beers, with 350 bottled options and 12 on tap. The latter are continually rotated, and the pub's 13-day quality pledge ensures the freshest drafts possible — the kegs are changed and the lines cleaned every two weeks. (The Sunset also buys quarter-barrels whenever possible, so that they're switched more often.) Ambitious regulars can win prizes by sampling all the beers necessary to complete the Euro Tour (for imported beers), the Sunset Beer Club (which includes 69 beers on tap) and the Yard Tour (which involves consuming a certain number of yards of any beer). Among those for whom beer is a religion, this place is paradise.

REASON TO CLIMB BEACON HILL

No. 9 Park

9 Park St., Boston; 617-742-9991;
www.no9park.com

Unless you've been living under a rock, you probably know that chef-owner Barbara Lynch was the recipient of this year's James Beard Award for best chef in the Northeast. That should tell you enough about the food. As for the other reasons we adore No. 9 Park: a staff that's attentive and informed without being sniffy; an unfussy yet sophisticated, dove-gray and dark wood interior that makes it among the warmest, most welcoming dining rooms anywhere; and a killer location on one of the most historic blocks in America, with the Boston Common and the gold dome of the State House right across the street, and the Athenaeum, the Union Club and Park Street Church only a few doors away. One of the best ways to show off the city to out-of-towners, it's one of the few restaurants that's actually worthy of all the breathless praise that's been lavished on it.

RESTAURANT REINCARNATION

UpStairs on the Square

91 Winthrop St., Cambridge; 617-864-1933;
www.upstairsonthesquare.com

When restaurateurs par excellence Mary-Catherine Deibel and Deborah Hughes lost their lease at the Hasty Pudding Club in 2001, we were disconsolate, lamenting the loss of a reliably superb and romantic spot. We were on pins and needles after they announced their reopening in Harvard Square in the space above Grendel's Den, and their new venture does not disappoint. The food is exquisite, and it's served in two of the most exuberantly decorated rooms you'll find outside of Palm Beach. Downstairs is the Monday Club bar, with animal-print rugs, pink and green striped walls and gilded chairs, where chef Susan Regis' menu has a bistro feel and features dishes like a soft-shell crab sandwich, pizzas and rib-eye steak. Upstairs is the Soiree room, which has an Arabian Nights feel and a small blue bar in the corner. In this room, chef Amanda Lydon's more formal French- and Italian-influenced fare prevails. If dining out is a form of theater, this place is worthy of a standing ovation.

SANDWICHES

Parish Café

361 Boylston St., Boston; 617-247-4777

It's a brilliant idea and one we wish we'd thought of: elevating the humble sandwich to high-concept status by inviting chefs from other restaurants to design them. The Schlesinger, named after the East Coast Grill's Chris, features warm banana bread with smoked ham, Monterey Jack and mango chutney, served with pickled ginger and red cabbage. There's also the Biba Steak and Blue (tenderloin and roquefort butter on a bleu cheese bread), the Elephant Walking on Eggs (a julienned vegetable omelette on French bread), and the ever-popular Norma's Zuni Roll (named for Norma Gillaspie of the Cottonwood Cafe, it's smoked turkey, dill havarti cheese, bacon and scallions on a warm tortilla roll and served with cranberry chipotle sauce and sour cream). With a happening weekend bar scene and the option of dining on the outdoor patio in warm weather, it's a hassle-free, casual place to go for a bite and a few beers.

SMOOTHIES

Jamba Juice at Boston University

775 Comm. Ave., Boston; 617-353-2991;
www.jambajuice.com

Now that the smoothie has become an integral part of life, anyone with a blender can claim to make them, but we're sticklers for taste and consistency, and this place has both just right. Part of a large chain that started on the West Coast, where smoothies are a year-round way of life, Jamba's smoothies come in two sizes, huge (24 oz.) and huger (32 oz.). The eye-popping selection includes orange, strawberry, cranberry, pineapple, banana, peach, mango, coconut, kiwi and (our personal favorite) chocolate and peanut butter, all made using fresh fruits, juices, yogurts, sorbets and soy milk. Workout warriors can spike their smoothies with protein, fiber and immunity boosters, and the calorically obsessed can get an exact breakdown of fat and vitamin content on the company's Web site. An ideal snack for in-between meals, smoothies offer a liquid pick-me-up that won't slow you down, and this place has them perfected.

SOUTHERN FOOD

Rouge

480 Columbus Ave., Boston; 617-867-0600;
www.rougeboston.com

An evening south of the Mason-Dixon line is only as far away as the South End, thanks to chef-owner Andy Husbands' chic little Dixie kitchen. The surroundings such as the red velvet booths are upscale, and most of the light comes from votive candles, although there are also touches of authentic Southern whimsy in details like the voodoo shrine in the bar. As for the food, it's what those of us who have lived in the South and miss it remember longingly: knife-and-fork chicken, New Orleans barbecue shrimp, root beer–glazed babyback ribs, and the best mint julep this side of Kentucky. The sourcing of ingredients is key; for instance, when Rouge serves up a special like crawfish, it's flown in fresh from the bayou. The only thing about Rouge that lacks that laid-back down-home feel is the efficient and speedy service.

STEAK HOUSE

Abe & Louie's

793 Boylston St., Boston; 617-536-6300;
www.abeandlouies.com

Some people prefer their porterhouse practically raw, except for a light cross-hatching from the grill, while others like their sirloin singed to a fare-thee-well. You'd think every steak house would prepare the steak to a diner's exact specifications, but this Back Bay mecca for meat eaters is one of the few that consistently get it right. In addition to the choicest cuts, expertly prepared, the kitchen turns out superb seafood (including raw shellfish choices on the menu similar to what you'd find at a raw bar) and excellent side dishes that don't taste like afterthoughts. Just as important, it has an award-winning but still manageable wine list and a bar that puts out a mean martini. The de rigeuer dark wood, brass and leather are classic steak house, and the attentive but unobtrusive staff sees to every little detail. Here's proof that being a carnivore is perfectly civilized.

STEAMERS

Barking Crab

88 Sleeper St., Boston; 617-426-2722

There's nothing simpler or more quintessentially New England than steamed clams served with broth and melted butter, and yet at so many restaurants, the steamers are mostly broken, rubbery and full of grit. Not at this casual, ramshackle clam shack, which sits in the shadows of the bigger buildings along the waterfront like a refugee from Booth Bay Harbor. Its secret: The clams are flown in fresh, three times a week, from a supplier in Maine who handpicks them. As a result, fewer are cracked or damaged, and all of them spent their ooze-sucking lives in the cleaner waters off northern New England. It's among the cheapest and least pretentious places to eat a lobster in Boston, and the laid-back atmosphere is complemented by live music five nights a week. A Down East classic, as casual and salty as a sail loft but without all the theme restaurant silliness.

HOT DOGS

Spike's Junkyard Dogs

108 Brighton Ave., Allston; 617-254-7700

A monument to the lowly hot dog, this funky little fast-food joint features a junkyard theme, with car doors, hubcaps and gas signs serving as the decor. Nevertheless, it's spotlessly clean, and the food is of the highest quality. The all-beef hot dogs are made exclusively for Spike's by a fourth-generation German sausage maker, while the buns are baked fresh according to Spike's own recipe. The menu features 22 options, including the Buffalo (topped with buffalo sauce, bleu cheese and scallions), the Reuben Dog (Russian dressing, sauerkraut and Swiss cheese), the Samurai (teriyaki sauce and sauteed onions), the German Shepherd (mustard and sauerkraut) and the Texas Ranger (barbecue sauce, bacon and cheddar). Number 22, the Sinatra, allows you to do it your way. And for any of the combos, feel free to substitute a veggie dog for a healthy alternative. As if all that weren't enough, Spike's has a "wall of fame" known as the Kennel Club. If you eat six hot dogs in 90 minutes or less, you get a T-shirt and your photo on the wall. The reigning champ stands at 12 hot dogs in 90 minutes. Beat that, and you get the T-shirt, the photo and your money back, which you'll probably want to spend on some Alka-Seltzer.

SUBURBAN RESTAURANT

Lumiere

1293 Washington St., West Newton; 617-244-9199;
www.bostonchefs.com

For anyone who considers anything outside of 02116 western Massachusetts, the idea of dining in Newton might seem akin to driving to Worcester for cocktails. But intrepid urbanites would do well to learn what the good citizens of the western suburbs have known for four years: Chef Michael Leviton's upscale modern French cuisine and minimalist, sophisticated dining room rival anything in Boston or Cambridge, although the prices are a tad more reasonable and there's actually a chance of finding on-street parking. The decor is spare but luxe, with white curtains and soft lighting; like Leviton's cooking, it's pure and free of anything extraneous. It may be condescending to describe it as a little slice of the South End all the way out near Exit 16, but that's how it feels. A logical favorite among the well-heeled sophisticates who live nearby, it's worth a trip from town.

TAPAS

Taberna de Haro

999 Beacon St., Brookline; 617-277-8272;
www.tabernadeharo.boston.swbd.net

A rarity among the Spanish restaurants on this side of the Atlantic: The husband-and-wife team who own it, Deborah and Julio de Haro, used to operate one in Madrid. Like a real Spanish tavern, the tables are few (with seating for 30 people only), and many of the regulars choose to eat standing up at the bar. Most of the 45 menu items are tapas, although the portions are slightly larger than at other places—10 to 15 bites each, as opposed to one or two. Among the most popular are gambas al ajillo (spicy garlic shrimp in olive oil) and croqetas de jamon, which look like mozzarella sticks but have finely ground pork instead of cheese inside. Many of the ingredients are imported from Spain, and flamenco and other Spanish music provides a pleasant sonic backdrop. Boston's next best thing to actually being in Andalusia.

TRIP TO PARIS FOR UNDER $100

Craigie Street Bistrot

5 Craigie Circle, Cambridge; 617-497-5511;
www.craigiestreetbistrot.com

Forget what the food snobs say; the best restaurants in France aren't the Michelin five-star places with famous names but the maman-et-papa holes-in-the-wall, where you feel like you've stumbled into somebody's kitchen. This cozy little nook on the outskirts of Harvard Square brilliantly re-creates both the food and atmosphere of a small French bistro. Chef Tony Maws spent a year in Lyons (and has worked with Wolfgang Puck and Clio's Ken Oringer), and his unfussy French cooking is known for its improvisation based upon the freshest available ingredients. The decor is old-school—red chairs, mustard and black trim, and vintage French art posters. The wine list is exclusively French, and the house wine is decanted before being brought to the table. You'll be tempted to pay in euros, or even old franc notes, but you'll be pleased when you see the bill in U.S. dollars. The three-course prix fixe dinner is $29.99 a head, and on Sundays after 9pm a $24.99 prix fixe meal is available. Vive le Cambridge!

WINGS

Buff's Pub

317 Washington St., Newton; 617-332-9134

This Newton Corner nook has won this award so many times it's almost becoming tedious. We'll never tire of its wings, though, which are available in four varieties—barbecue, honey barbecue, honey hot and Buffalo—all made according to a secret recipe. Whatever's in them, the wings achieve the perfect balance of heat and flavor, spicy enough to get the tongue tingling and the eyes watering without being so hellacious as to burn out the taste buds. The consistency, too, is perfect: crisp and meaty instead of slimy or chewy, while the dip for the buffalo wings contains chunks of real bleu cheese. All that deliciousness for $7.95 (a half order is $4.25) explains why people come all the way to Newton Corner to sit in a bar where the only concession to decor is a mangy buffalo head on the wall. ⟶

AFTER-WORK DRINKS

Aqua

120 Water St., Boston, 617-720-4900; www.aquaboston.com

For the sophisticated 9-to-5-er who doesn't have the bank to spend beaucoup bucks on a few pops after work, we recommend this sleek, modern hangout in the heart of the Financial District. The wavy blue, green and silver decor fits the club's name, and the slightly funky, downtown vibe helps even the most Dilbert-like office drones forget that they spend most of their day in a cubicle. So do the 20-something honeys who crowd the place at quitting time. Superior bar fare (of the wings, bruschetta and crabcakes variety) keeps everyone from getting a little too tipsy on drinks like the signature Aquatini, which looks a little like Ty-D-Bol but tastes a whole lot better.

BEST-KEPT SECRET

Flann O'Brien's

1619 Tremont St., Boston, 617-566-7744

Tucked away in the hinterlands of Brigham Circle, this funky neighborhood spot attracts a convivial mixture of doctors and nurses from the nearby hospitals, blue-collar locals and bohemian art students. In fact, the portraits of famous Irish literary figures adorning the walls are the handiwork of those talented kids at the Massachusetts College of Art. The jukebox boasts a staggering selection of esoterica, from Kate Bush and the Pixies to Dean Martin and Elvis, which serenades a happy crowd that dances, drinks and mingles with oblivion. A friendly, no-frills playpen for young adults.

BRIGHTON SCENE-STEALER

Tonic

1316 Comm. Ave., Brighton; 617-566-6699; www.thetonicbar.com

Ever since this hot spot opened, hordes of young professionals and college kids have flocked to get in, attracted by it's chic appeal. Classy and hip, Tonic attracts a regular crowd that stays steady and strong until late into the night, drinking martinis and noshing on entrées. Don't worry about overpopularity—it's palatial (including the funky subterranean Met Lounge), so even if it's crowded, you don't feel claustrophobic. And the Sunday brunch (complete with make-your-own Bloody Marys) is the perfect way to wind down after a hard Saturday night.

CHEAP BEER BAR

Side Bar Food & Spirits

14 & 16 Bromfield St., Boston; 617-357-1899

Tossing back a few brewskis shouldn't cost a fistful of simoleons, which explains the appeal of this Downtown Crossing hole-in-the-wall. An eclectic crowd flocks here for cheap eats, even cheaper beer and the cheesiest jukebox this side of 1985. Def Leppard and Skid Row reign supreme, along with the half-price appetizers from 8 to 10 pm, the 10 cent wings from 5-10 pm, and the array of beer specials, like $5 pitchers of Pabst Blue Ribbon (pints are $1.50). Anyone who feels like living large can splurge on a bottle of Busch Light for two bucks. The kind of place where Charles Bukowski or Homer Simpson would feel right at home.

DANCING FOR NON-CLUBBERS

The Alley

Boylston Place, Boston; 617-351-7000; www.bigeasyboston.com; www.sugarshack.com

The math is easy: One alley plus five different venues equals big fun. Whether it's the lazy, Bourbon Street ambience of the Big Easy Bar, the hip-hop and top-40 dance vibe at the Sugar Shack and La Boom, the laid-back English-pub feel of Bishop's or casual dining at the Sweetwater Café (which reopens in September after some renovations are completed), there's a scene to tickle any fancy. There are also enough gorgeous young things to fill an Abercrombie & Fitch catalog, and a pizza kitchen that stays open until the wee hours. What more could you want?

DIVE BAR

The Silhouette Lounge

200 Brighton Ave., Allston; 617-254-9306

Known as "the Sil" to its regulars, this slightly seedy, utterly unpretentious watering hole has sustained a motley crew of students, bohos, punks and barflies for more than 27 years. The pub grub is several notches above edible, and cheap pitchers of beer keep the camaraderie flowing. Besides a pool table, a jukebox and a dart room that attracts teams and enthusiasts from all over, free popcorn is just about the only frill. A throwback to the days before a bar was supposed to resemble a theme park.

EXAMPLE OF KEEPIN' IT REAL

Wally's Cafe

427 Mass. Ave., Boston, 617-424-1408; www.wallyscafe.com

What you won't find here: a stiff cover charge, plush leather banquettes and specialty drinks that call for Cointreau. What you will find: furniture upholstered with torn Naugahyde, a bar with all the basics and great jazz 365 days a year. Since it was founded in 1947 by Joseph Walcott, this South End landmark has endured as an intimate and low-key setting for appearances by jazz legends like Sarah Vaughan and Charlie Parker. A favorite haunt among students at Berklee and the New England Conservatory (who sometimes jam there), it's the top pick among true jazz connoisseurs, as much for its gritty atmosphere as for the excellent music.

GAY MEN'S NIGHT OUT

Vapor

100 Warrenton St., Boston; 617-422-0862

Where the boys are, whether it's Latino night, hip-hop night or even (gasp!) straight night. The mass of sweaty hunks on the dance floor rarely congeals into a swampy mess like some other gay clubs, and you don't have to be a gym rat with bulging biceps and overdeveloped pecs to pair off on the elliptical dance floor. On the quieter (i.e. cruisier) side is a DJ lounge with video screens. An intriguing mix of college-age pretty boys and an edgier dance crowd, it's disco cha-cha without all the hissy fabulousness and attitudinal unpleasantness.

HOTEL BAR

Noir

1 Bennett St., Cambridge; 617-661-8010

There's something intrinsically sexy about hotel bars and it's not just the mysterious strangers from out of town and the fact that the nearest available bed is only an elevator ride away. This decadent but sophisticated little nook at the Charles Hotel gets the atmosphere just right. The decor is inspired by film noir, with plush velvet banquettes and subdued lighting that give it a deliciously illicit feel, whether you're sipping one of their signature cocktails, like Noir's Boudoir, or slurping oysters from the raw bar. An outdoor patio with a grill and live music once a week add to the appeal, as does Noir's punctiliousness about using only the finest ingredients in everything, most noticeably the fresh-squeezed fruit drinks.

IMPRESSION OF THE SUNSET STRIP

Lucky's Lounge

355 Congress St., Boston; 617-357-5828; www.luckyslounge.com

A throwback to the Rat Pack era, it's decorated like the rumpus room of a ranch house in Palm Springs, circa 1967. A favorite among the artsy crowd who live and work in the loft spaces in the surrounding Fort Point Channel area, it also draws cognoscenti from across the bridge, like former J. Geils frontman Peter Wolf and Derek Lowe of the Red Sox. Live music is presented every night except Monday. Sundays are Sinatra night; Tuesdays feature the instrumental guitar group Lucky Stereo. The perfect place to order one for your baby and one more for the road.

DANCE CLUB

Avalon

15 Lansdowne St., Boston

617 262 2424

Whether it's hip-hop, R&B and reggae on Thursdays, the polyglot, omnisexual fantasy world of Avaland on Fridays, sexy Saturdays with DJ Nailz, or a standing-room-only concert by a top-notch live band, the granddaddy of Lansdowne Street discos is still the place to shake your groove thang. The club's first-rate sound system (co-created by the acoustic experts at Eastern Audio Works and Avalon co-owner John Lyons), impeccable production values and a giant, wide-open dance floor make it easy to lose yourself in the music. No wonder such hard-partying celebrities as Bruce Willis and Carmen Electra have been spotted there gettin' their groove on.

PLACE WHERE THE VALETS ARE BORED WITH BENTLEYS

Mistral

223 Columbus Ave., Boston; 617-867-9300; www.mistralbistro.com

Even in these tough economic times, it's nice to see that the privileged class still enjoys its privileges, one of which is sipping and supping in the postmodern Provencal elegance of this enduringly chic restaurant. That's not to say that the menu is overpriced, or even particularly expensive — the delicious thin-crust pizzas range from $14 to $18, and everything else is so outstanding that cost isn't really the point. Still, the crowd is decidedly upscale, tending toward expensive-looking blondes in head-to-toe haute couture and guys whose watches cost as much as a condo. The impeccably professional staff is adept at making everyone, whether prince or pauper, feel at home. And the atmosphere is relaxed and lively, not stuffy. It's enough to make a devout Communist want to become a billionaire.

IRISH BAR

Hennessy's of Boston

25 Union St., Boston, 617-742-2121; www.somerspubs.com

In a town with more Irish bars than you can shake a shillelagh at, it's a tall order to single out just one, but our favorite (in Faneuil Hall, of all places) scores on several fronts. To begin with, there's the look, with exposed wood beams and a turf-burning fireplace that looks like something straight out of a pub in Dublin. Then there's the selection of Irish brews, which goes way beyond Guinness, and a menu that includes such authentic grub as imported Irish sausage, shepherd's pie, fish and chips, and cottage pie. It even serves an Irish breakfast every Saturday and Sunday morning. Most important, though, is the convivial atmosphere created by a friendly staff and the colorful crew of regulars. This is the sort of place where you'd like to spend a cold winter evening, sipping Jameson's and swapping tall tales with the blokes at the bar.

JAZZ CLUB

Regattabar

1 Bennett St., Cambridge, 617-661-5000; www.regattabar.com

There was a time when Boston was lousy with great jazz joints like the High Hat and Storyville. This intimate venue inside the Charles Hotel continues the tradition. Recent headliners have included the likes of Elvin Jones, Chick Corea, Ahmad Jamal and Dave Holland. The sightlines are excellent and seating is on the same level as the performers, which encourages interaction between audience and artist. As a result, it's the rare performer who doesn't hang out after the show to chat or sign autographs. The recent installation of $7,000 worth of new equipment has improved the club's already excellent sound, and the picture windows overlooking Harvard Square offer a view with the groove.

LESBIAN NIGHT OUT

Circuit Girl

(now at Night Games at the Holiday Inn)

30 Washington St., Somerville; www.circuitgirl.com

After its third move in as many years, this weekly Friday-night mixer has finally found the perfect home. Located just off the Zakim bridge in Somerville, Circuit Girl a Night Games is a two-story wonderland for sisters of Sap pho, featuring a huge dance floor (where resident DJ Kr Kono spins the night away), pool tables and a wrap around balcony with its own bar, sofas and seating. Best all, there's free parking in a safe, well-lit lot.

MOST IMPROVED

Ryles Jazz Club

212 Hampshire St., Cambridge; 617-876-9330; www.rylesjazz.com

This Inman Square landmark was starting to get a litt dowdy, but along with renovations and physic changes, management has restored the luster to th club's bookings. Ryles presents live music six nights week, and programming includes a Sunday jazz brunc that lasts from 10 am to 3 pm, salsa and merengue dan ing on Thursday and Friday, and swing and latin dan ing on Saturday. The 18-piece in-house band, the Ryl Jazz Orchestra, performs with out-of-town headliner The only survivor from the days when Inman Squa was a mecca for live music, it's a dependable good tim in a fresh new package.

NEW NIGHT

Atmosphere Sundays at An Tua Nua

835 Beacon St., Boston; 617-262-2121

Even hardcore club-crawlers need a night to chill ou and here they do it to the funky bass beats of Bosto only weekly deep-house night. The concept is to dup cate a mellow Manhattan scene, and the crowd is cor spondingly hip. With DJs KC, Armen and Pete spinning, anyone who doesn't like to dance will probably be bored, and anyone who does will probably become a regular. An excellent way to forget that tomorrow is Monday.

PERENNIAL PARTY

Saturday at the Roxy

279 Tremont St., Boston, 617-338-7699; www.roxyplex.com

A continuous loop of good times, a night at the Roxy is like stepping into a party in South Beach, Rio or Ibiza. A diverse, good-looking and glamorous crowd wedged into the latest designer clubwear laughs, drinks and dances to a superior mix of high-energy house music and dance mixes spun by DJ Adilson. The enormous dance floor is a writhing sea of hotties, while the tables in the wrap-around balcony offer excellent viewing of the action below and an intimate spot to sit it out. If this place doesn't get your blood pumping, you might want to check yourself for a pulse.

PLACE TO DISCOVER YOUR INNER CHILD

Jillian's Boston

145 Ipswich St., Fenway, 617-437-0300; www.jilliansboston.com

Jillian's provides all the thrills of a carnival midway without the shady characters and the smell of old deep-fryer oil. On three floors, you'll find pool tables, table tennis, bubble hockey, foosball, darts, 250 high-tech video games and every other arcade diversion you can think of, as well as a few you've never seen before, like Hyperbowl (virtual bowling). Jillian's even has blackjack tables (though you can't play for real money). Best of all, acting like a 10-year-old doesn't mean you have to forgo the pleasures of adulthood, since the first floor has full bar service. An excellent place to waste a weekend afternoon.

PLACE TO FIND A RELATIONSHIP OF LIMITED DURATION

Vox Populi

755 Boylston St., Boston; 617-424-8300

We're not promising you'll meet Mr. Right or the girl of your dreams, or even someone you'd necessarily want to introduce to your friends, but an amazing amount of eye contact, flirting and swapping of phone numbers goes on at this two-story hot spot across from the Prudential. The first floor consists of a long bar and fireplace lounge, while upstairs is a more subdued restaurant and lounge. In good weather, the sidewalk café offers an excellent vantage point for watching the endless pageant of Boylston Street. The people have spoken, and they've unanimously declared this the Back Bay spot to meet eligible and upscale singles.

PLACE TO MEET AN ATHLETE OR A STOCKBROKER

The Rack

24 Clinton St., Boston, 617-725-1051; www.therackboston.com

In this high-testosterone zone, professional athletes and financial types play pool, drink, dance, consume munchies and otherwise satisfy their nocturnal cravings. Its proximity to both the FleetCenter and Faneuil Hall makes it a no-brainer, while the uniformly good-looking staff ministers to their every need and the buff-colored felt brings out the Minnesota Fats and Fast Eddie Felson in all of them. Live music six nights a week provides a sonic backdrop, with an outdoor patio offering a comparatively quiet place to retreat to. The Rack's endless slate of charity events, which raises about $1 million per year for causes like the Nomar 5 Fund and the American Cancer Society, also makes it Boston's biggest-hearted hot spot.

PLACE TO SEE AND BE SEEN

Saint

90 Exeter St., Boston, 617-236-1134; www.saintnitery.com

Last fall, Boston got a new synonym for "swanky" with the opening of this deluxe subterranean hangout. Located in the space formerly occupied by the legendary restaurant Café Budapest, the tastefully louche lounge scene fuses all the elements of nightlife—dining, drinking, music and couches to sprawl out on and shoot the breeze or watch what everyone else is up to. The entry room features a vodka-infusion bar (with flavors rotating seasonally); the main dining room has a low, communal table that fosters mixing and mingling; and the so-called Bordello Room, with its dark red upholstery and secluded VIP booths hiding velvet-clad beds, brings to mind the Playboy mansion. Outstanding eats by chef Rene Michelena also earn Saint the award for Most Underappreciated Food in Boston.

BLAST FROM THE PAST

Kings

117 Scotia St., Boston; 617-266-2695

The sport of kings (or at least guys named Earl) is back in fashion, and there's no more stylish place to play it than this neo-retro bowling alley brought to you by nightlife kingpin Patrick Lyons. The self-consciously hip, mid-century aesthetic is totally boss, and the staff looks like the cast of the latest teen drama from the WB. Sixteen tenpin lanes (four of which are private) are the main attraction, but you can also chill at one of the eight pool tables or in the vintage-Vegas ambience of the club's restaurant, the DeVille. It's one of the few places where you won't feel like a dork wearing rented shoes.

PLACE TO EMBARRASS YOUR FRIENDS

Dick's Last Resort

55 Huntington Ave., Boston

617-267-8080

www.dickslastresort.com

We don't care how dignified or restrained you are. It's impossible to maintain your composure at this den of debauchery. A professionally wiseass crew of local actors, comedians and career wait staff specializes in good-natured debasement, whether it's making the prissiest person you know down a shot named after the sex act Monica Lewinsky performed on Bill Clinton, or forcing your uptight boss to wear a dunce cap and answer to an insulting nickname. The pranks, shenanigans and tomfoolery are nonstop but fall short of hazing. Not surprisingly, it's a popular spot for bachelor and bachelorette parties. If you're going to pay for abuse, you might as well get your money's worth.

PLACE TO TAKE FRIENDS FROM NEW YORK

33 Restaurant & Lounge

33 Stanhope St., Back Bay; 617-572-3311, www.33restaurant.com

Anyone searching for that New York state of mind need look no further than this oasis of urban suavity and sophistication. The visual focus of the street-level dining room is a bar that subtly but continuously shifts colors through the spectrum, while the downstairs lounge (reached by a staircase that provides an architectural optical illusion) is straight out of Soho. An impossibly young, good-looking, stylish crowd sits around on the minimalist geometric furniture, some of them looking bored and others speaking languages you've never heard of. In fact, the whiff of ennui combined with the palpable hipness are enough to make the most jaded Manhattanite look like a member of the pep squad.

PLACE WHERE ANYTHING CAN HAPPEN

The Enormous Room

567 Mass Ave., Cambridge;
617-491-5550

The Casbah meets a Williamsburg artists' loft. Located up a flight of stairs behind a nondescript door in Central Square, it's known for its eclectic, anything-goes lineup of live entertainment, which can range from DJs to performance art starring thinly sliced vegetables. Funky lanterns create a diffuse, dimly lit atmosphere, while couches of various styles and a large multilevel platform sectioned with Persian rugs and deeply colored pillows lend the surroundings a North African den. The menu boasts only two dinner options: meat or vegetarian ($12-$14 per person). Either way, it's whatever the chef feels like cooking, and it's served communally. A bohemian refuge amid the encroaching corporate conformity of Central Square.

PRE-FENWAY BAR

The Baseball Tavern

1306 Boylston St., Boston; 617-437-1644

If the Red Sox had a granny, this would be her attic (assuming she liked a little nip now and then). The place is crammed with mementos and memorabilia that the owners have accumulated, including signed photos of such hometown deities as Ted Williams, Bobby Orr, Larry Bird and Rocky Marciano. TVs, pool tables and dartboards make it a perfect place to rendezvous and kill some time before the game. Best of all, it's a ways from Kenmore Square and the whirling vortex of humanity that descends on that block during a baseball game, so you don't have to feel like a salmon swimming upstream getting there.

POST-FENWAY BAR

Boston Beer Works

112 Canal St., Boston; 617-896-2337

After the last inning, it's a short stumble across the street to this microbrewery and restaurant where they make up to 50 different beers during the year. Some are year-round offerings, like the Bambino Ale and Fenway Pale Ale, while others are seasonal, like the Pumpkin Ale in autumn and the summer Watermelon Ale (served with a slice of actual watermelon on the side). But our personal favorite is the Bluebeery Ale, served with blueberries in the bottom of the glass. It's a bit like pie in alcoholic-beverage form. If you're looking to bring a sampling home with you, buy a Growler—a half-gallon container filled with your choice of whatever is on tap. It can come in handy when the Sox lose. An excellent place to bitch about the Yankees.

PRE-FLEETCENTER BAR

Hurricane O'Reilly's

150 Canal St., Boston; 617-722-0161,
www.hurricaneoreillys.com

The quintessential place for a pregame pop, it's within spitting distance of the FleetCenter and serves as the de facto clubhouse for hard-core Bruins and Celtics fans. The players have been known to stop by after the game, but beforehand they can be criticized and analyzed freely, and they often are. Not surprisingly, the house drink is a Hurricane, made from a secret recipe using Southern Comfort, Bacardi and fruit juices. A few of those and you won't mind paying a week's salary for a slice of pizza at the game. Fans of rival teams are tolerated but not particularly welcome.

POST-FLEETCENTER BAR

The Harp

85 Causeway St., Boston; 617-742-1010

Located around the corner from the FleetCenter, this softly lit, two-floored favorite has reasonable prices for

PLACE TO FIND SUMMER LOVIN

Tia's at Long Wharf

200 Atlantic Ave., Boston

617-227-0828

www.tiaswaterfront.com

If it weren't for the Boston accents, you'd think you were in Key West. This waterfront watering hole with an outdoor patio overlooking the harbor has a breezy, tropical feel, and for 21 years, a barely 21-and-older crowd has gathered there on sultry summer nights. The relaxed atmosphere makes fashion a nonissue, and the proximity to all those boats bobbing on the water lends the place a vacationlike vibe. Hawaiian shirts and huaraches are acceptable. The closest any Boston bar comes to a Jimmy Buffett song.

BOYLSTON PLACE, "THE ALLEY", BOSTON, MA 02116

617.351.7000

the Big Easy BAR

NEW HIPSTER HANGOUT

The Living Room

10 Atlantic Ave., Boston; 617-723-5101;

www.thelivingroomboston.com

Just as you'd expect, the Living Room's full of comfortable chairs and couches. Unlike most living rooms, though, this one has two bars (a big curved one in the middle and a smaller one backed by a freshwater aquarium off to the side), along with an inordinate number of good-looking people standing around. The location is slightly off the beaten path but convenient to the North End, the waterfront and the FleetCenter. The kitchen stays open until midnight, serving superior grub along the lines of artichoke and spinach pot-stickers and mini-hamburgers known as Roadside Sliders. There's also an outside patio where smoking is allowed. Quiet but lively, hip yet not snotty, it's the scene for people who are too cool to care about making the scene.

beer and food, especially compared with the extortionate concession stands at the game. Later on, it picks up more of a nightclub atmosphere, with dancing and a DJ on Thursday, and live music on Friday and Saturday nights. The bars in Faneuil Hall are fancier, and a lot of its nearby competitors are bigger and better-lit, but for an unpretentious, laid-back place to recover from the adrenaline rush of rooting for the Bruins or the Celtics, the Harp is a hands-down winner.

POST-THEATER DRINKS

Caprice

275 Tremont St., Boston; 617-292-0080;

www.capricelounge.com

Caprice is undoubtedly the Theater District's most cosmopolitan spot to have a nightcap and discuss the play, dissect the opera or deconstruct the ballet. The spare, modern decor, with mahogany walls, recessed lighting and oversize suede sofas reflects the laid-back sensibility of its French, Greek and American owners. Early on, it's a restaurant and lounge serving French Mediterranean food and boasting a vaguely laconic vibe, but later in the evening things get decidedly clubbier, making it a lively place to emerge from the alternate reality of the evening's entertainment.

ROCK CLUB

Middle East

472-480 Mass. Ave., Cambridge; 617-864-3278;

www.mideastclub.com

The last of the great gritty rock clubs from the days when Boston's live music scene included such legendary venues as the Rat, the Channel and Chet's Last Call. An impressive lineup, seven nights a week, features local and national talent ranging from the P-Funk All-Stars to Throwing Muses. On most nights, there's more than one act to choose from, since this Central Square landmark boasts four stages—Upstairs, Downstairs, the Corner, and a performance and restaurant space called ZuZu. A second restaurant next door serves up tasty Middle Eastern/Lebanese fare. In other words, there's really no reason ever to leave, and a lot of the regulars look like they never do.

ROMANTIC BAR

Top of the Hub

800 Boylston St., Boston; 617-536-1775;

www.selectrestaurants.com

This swanky bar atop the city's second-tallest skyscraper looks like the setting of a Cole Porter song or one of those sappy old movies where the reluctant boy and girl realize they're destined to be together through the magic of a dry martini. Located on the 52nd floor of the Prudential, the room offers sweeping, unobstructed views in every direction, and the bar's dim lighting makes the city below twinkle all the more brightly. The quiet atmosphere also includes a small stage and dance floor, with live music nightly. It's perfect for a date on Valentine's Day or an anniversary celebration, and more than a few men have chosen to pop the question here. Attentive but unobtrusive waiters and bartenders provide excellent support staff for Cupid.

SPORTS BAR

The Place

2 Broad St., Boston; 617-523-2081;

www.theplaceboston.com

Most so-called sports bars are little more than standard saloons with a few TVs and some team memorabilia, but the Place reinvents the concept. Flat-screen plasma TVs are just the tip of the technological iceberg. The Place's in-house video production team has put together a video of the greatest moments in Boston sports history (it runs twice nightly), and WBZ-4 sports anchor Bob Lobel hosts a live broadcast every Wednesday night. No wonder Tom Brady and Nomar Garciaparra have been known to jump behind the bar. The kind of spot where you're likely to see sports writers Dan Shaughnessy and Bob Ryan having a heated debate, the Place also serves pizza, sandwiches and appetizers and has a dance floor for those dull moments during halftime.

THEME NIGHTS

ZuZu

474 Mass. Ave., Cambridge; 617-864-3278;

www.mideastclub.com

ZuZu offers a completely different scene depending on the day of the week. Mondays it's "Unhappy Hour," a revolving roster of local bands performing those sad songs that say so much. Tuesdays feature the bluesy, gravel-voiced Frank Morey, and on Wednesdays, it's jazz night. Thursdays through Saturdays boast theme nights that are ever changing (so far, it's been everything from cabaret acts to dance parties featuring '60's go-go gear and mod music). Few bars have such schizophrenic programming, and ZuZu lives up to its multiple personalities brilliantly.

WILD NIGHT OUTSIDE OF THE CITY

The Palace

1500 Broadway, Saugus; 781-321-1660;

www.thepalaceboston.com

This North Shore megaplex boasts a whopping 66,000 square feet of nocturnal goings-on in 11 clubs on two different floors. A $5-$10 cover gets you in either upstairs or down and lets you roam free. Rio, the newest Palace room, re-creates the tropical-party atmosphere of Carnivale. The Male Encounter offers Men in Motion, a beefcake-a-go-go performance popular for bachelorette parties. Oxygen is a hip-hop club featuring DJ Chaos, while the Copa has a Latin dance vibe, and Uptown is a throwback to the golden age of disco, with live performances by the likes of Lisa Lisa and C&C Music Factory. At the Rockpile, local bands headline and Barfly offers old-school reggae while the VIP room does likewise for classic hip-hop. The Lobby Bar is a loungey area with pool tables, and the under-21 club Underground rounds out the offerings. Who knew there was so much to do in Saugus?

NEIGHBORHOOD HANGOUTS

ALLSTON

Common Ground Bar & Grill

85 Harvard Ave., Allston; 617-783-2071

As the name implies, there is something for everyone at the Common Ground—it's the kind of place where Allston hipsters mingle with families during the day while sports fans watch the games. The diverse entertainment lineup runs the gamut from live ska music by regulars the Allstonians, to Simpsons Trivia Night and Let Down night (its slogan is "losers and has-beens get a discount at the door"). With 16 draft beers (Magners cider included!) to choose from and one helluva turkey burger, said losers can easily self-medicate.

BACK BAY

Clerys

113 Dartmouth St., Boston; 617-262-9874;
www.irishconnection.com

The clock strikes 5 and Hancock tower staffers and thirsty Back Bay denizens alike migrate en masse to this Irish pub. Window seats are prime real estate for people-watching on the corner of Dartmouth and Columbus, and as the evening progresses so do the moves on the dance floor downstairs. Despite the decidedly Irish motif, the location on the cusp of the South End and Back Back ensures a diverse crowd.

BEACON HILL

Harvard Gardens

316 Cambridge St., Boston; 617-523-2727;
www.harvardgardens.com

This Hill favorite draws hordes of young professionals, from 20- and 30-somethings and recent college grads who live in the neighborhood to doctors at Mass. General. Singles need not be shy; the dating scene is alive and well here—and it's nothing close to a meat-market atmosphere. Stake your claim early Thursday through Saturday nights; the dinner crowd, drawn in by gourmet thin-crust pizzas, mac and cheese and other scrumptious comfort food, often trickles over to the standing-room-only bar.

BRIGHTON

SoHo

386 Market St., Brighton; 617-562-6000;
www.sohoboston.com

We were skeptical when it first opened. A SoHo in Brighton? Dream on. But the restaurant/nightclub/lounge actually delivers a slice of New York's urban atmosphere. The modern-art installations, black leather banquettes and extensive food and drink list make this spot a beacon for a diverse Brighton crowd. Sports fans can watch the games on 16 TVs (which include two screens in the bathrooms). Brighton Center isn't exactly on the beaten path, but lines out the door on Friday and Saturday nights prove it's worth the trek.

BROOKLINE

Washington Square Tavern

714 Washington St., Brookline; 617-232-8989

Dark wood fixtures, the informality of paper napkin settings and Paul Hathaway's comfort food are the key ingredients to the tavern's longstanding appeal. A large communal table in the dining room encourages lively conversation between individual parties (including lots of Brookline regulars), and the dozen imports and microbrews on tap keep things simple yet distinctly unique.

CAMBRIDGE: CENTRAL SQUARE

The Cantab Lounge

738 Mass. Ave., Cambridge; 617-354-2685;
www.cantablounge.com

CAMBRIDGE: HARVARD SQUARE

Grafton Street

1230 Mass. Ave., Cambridge; 617-497-0400;
www.graftonstreetcambridge.com

At this upscale Harvard Square hot spot, contemporary cuisine like saffron gnocchi shares the menu with classic Irish influences. Grafton Street's polished decor, expansive dining area and picture windows overlooking Harvard Square and Mass. Ave. make it anything but your typical quaint Irish bar.

CAMBRIDGE: INMAN SQUARE

The Druid

1357 Cambridge St., Cambridge; 617-497-0965

A great place to start or end your night when dining at one of Inman Square's many eateries, the Druid's barroom is smoky, loud and Irish through and through. Live Irish music gives way to patron sing-alongs. The Guinness is pulled properly, the shepherd's pie and meatloaf are served hot and the general feeling is the more, the merrier.

CAMBRIDGE: KENDALL SQUARE

Kendall Café

233 Cardinal Medeiros Ave., Cambridge; 617-661-0993;
www.thekendall.com

Going to the cozy Kendall is like listening to live music in someone's living room. But the word is out, and it gets to be close-quarters pretty fast. Get there early and get comfortable—the shows start as early as 8:30 pm. Patrons have been treated to impromptu performances by the likes of Elvis Costello, Jewel and Big Head Todd, but more likely you'll hear local outfits in numerous genres trying out their songs for a diverse crowd.

CAMBRIDGE: PORTER SQUARE

Toad

1920 Mass. Ave., Cambridge; 617-497-4950

In addition to being a pint-sized Porter Square institution, Toad serves as a platform for musicians on the rise— Toad's been a playpen for locals like Dennis Brennan, Laurie Sargent and Morphine. Booze flows as freely as the conversation—it's impossible not to meet your neighbors when you're in this most tiny of neighborhood bars. And better still, there's never a cover.

CHARLESTOWN

Warren Tavern

This neighborhood hotspot also won an award for Best Wednesday Night Out. See the next page for its write-up in the Days of the Week section.

DORCHESTER

224 Boston St., Dorchester; 617-265-1217

There's nothing fancy about 224. And that's why it's so adored. Local artists' work adorns the walls, and tableware is mix and match. The food is the main attraction, and couples, singles, gays, straights and even suburbanites regularly roll in to chow on the no-frills grub. Seafood selections, namely cod cakes and calamari, top the charts.

DOWNTOWN CROSSING

The Littlest Bar

47 Province St., Boston; 617-523-9766

Talk about tiny. The fire marshall cringes when there are more than 38 people in this joint. The window wells double as beer storage, and the draft menu tops out at two (Guinness and Newcastle). But as the saying goes, good things come in small packages. Claustrophobes beware: On an average night you'll rub elbows, literally, with just about everyone in the place.

SOUTH END

Delux

100 Chandler St., Boston; 617-338-5258

In true South End style, this treasure trove of kitsch (complete with vintage record album–covered walls and an Elvis "shrine") attracts an eclectic crowd of bike messengers, artists, bankers and fashionistas. Refreshingly, nothing on the menu costs more than $10, and with recipes hailing from Mexico, the Caribbean, the South and New England, the only thing missing is the King's favorite: peanut-butter-and-banana sandwiches.

WEDNESDAY

Warren Tavern

2 Pleasant St., Charlestown; 617-241-8142

www.warrentavern.com

The oldest tavern in Boston has seen the likes of Paul Revere and George Washington. These days it's not revolutionaries but the after-work and singles crowds that gather here to hoist a few and listen to the one-man cover band: Four local musicians rotate weekly, and their specialties range from the Beatles to new wave.

JAMAICA PLAIN

Doyle's Café

3484 Washington St., Jamaica Plain;
617-524-2345; www.doylescafe.com

A legend in it's own time, Doyle's has been a favorite of Boston's politicians since 1882, with every mayor since John F. "Honey Fitz" Fitzgerald paying a visit. Newspaper clippings and photos of Boston's political history adorn the walls and, liberal or conservative, regulars come for the brew (28 on tap), the Irish and German cuisine—and for the company.

NEWTON

Union Street Restaurant & The Attic Bar

107 R Union St., Newton Center; 617-964-6684;
www.unionst.com

Tucked behind the shops of Newton's Piccadilly Square, the three-floor sports bar and live music venue features a two-tiered, 150-person outdoor patio the likes of which you'd be hard put to find within city limits. Well worth braving the Green Line for the alfresco dining, as well as the free wings (Mondays, 8-10 pm) and salsa Tuesdays.

• • • • • • • •

NORTH END

Lucca

226 Hanover St., Boston; 617-742-9200;
www.luccaboston.com

Couples chat over the candlelit tables while scenesters sip and sup Northern Italian staples at the mahogany bar. Factor in the marble floors, lovely stained-glass inset on the back wall and the tall front windows that open onto the hustle and bustle of Hanover Street, and you've got the ideal North End experience.

SOMERVILLE: DAVIS SQUARE

The Burren

247 Elm St., Somerville; 617-776-6896

It's easy to mistake Davis for Dublin at the Burren when you're sipping a Harp or Murphy's and chowing on Guinness beef stew while thick brogues and melodic Irish seissiuns fill the air. The Irish owners' stamp of authenticity is right on the mark, and by the end of the night even the most un-Gaelic patron will know a shillelagh from a claddagh ring.

• • • • • • • •

SOMERVILLE: UNION SQUARE

Tir na nÓg

366 Somerville Ave., Somerville; 617-628-4300;
www.thenog.com

Known simply as "the Nog" to regulars, this Irish pub is so beloved it has spawned two patron-published newsletters to keep everyone up-to-date on the goings-on of both the pub and its favorite folks. Live music (acoustic is the specialty) is a near-nightly event, and Peter Wolf and Duke Levine are known to jump in occasionally with Harvard and Tufts musicians for a song or two.

SOUTH BOSTON

The Boston Beer Garden

732 East Broadway, South Boston; 888-307-0668;
www.bostonbeergarden.com

Southie's Beer Garden is the hands-down, no-frills favorite of younger locals. The beer selection (almost 40) is top-notch—and the wine list is surprisingly extensive. The menu runs the gamut from standard pub food to dishes like fried scrod, but the real reasons people love this place are the fish and chips and the steak tips. ⊷

DAYS OF THE WEEK

Network television execs and bar owners will agree that providing solid entertainment seven nights a week is easier said than done. Homebodies have TV Guide to direct them toward quality programming, and now social butterflies have the IMPROPER staff to let them know where the party's at each night of the week. After months of bar-hopping we bring you the fruits of our labor: a day-by-day guide to the best places to socialize.

Bump Sundays at Phoenix Landing

512 Mass. Ave., Cambridge;
617-576-6260

Serious house-heads as well as the average bloke looking for a fun evening revel in the Phoenix Landing's underground scene fueled by Bump's resident DJs Randy Deshaies, Sergio Santos, John Pacheco, George Nessis and Arturo. International DJs such as L.A.'s DJ Colette and London's Kenny Hawkes make the rounds, and the result is a hands-in-the-air, screaming-to-the-music kind of vibe you won't find elsewhere on a Sunday.

Celebrity DJ Invitational at the B-Side Lounge

92 Hampshire St., East Cambridge;
617-354-0766

The B-Side's Monday night amateur DJ series is the serious collector's chance to dust off the old 45s or LPs (or CDs) and show off his/her amateur DJ skills in a laid-back setting—a favorite for hipsters and locals alike.

Orange at the Kells

161 Brighton Ave., Allston;
617-782-9082; www.thekells.com

Who says there's nothing to do on a Tuesday night? Resident DJ Tim Ryan and Ireland's John Davis' show at the Kells features local, national and international guest DJs (some are known to stop spinning to buy a round for the house). If nothing else, it's a small reprieve from the workweek grind.

Warren Tavern—see above

The Boston Sail Loft

80 Atlantic Ave., Boston; 617-227-7280

If you prefer a down-to-earth casual bar over DJs and dancing, head to this harborside joint. With its homey atmosphere, yummy sea food and jars of free oreo cookies on the bar, the Sail Loft attracts recently sprung 9-to-5-ers looking to kick back over a beer or a meal. There's even a tiny side deck over the water.

Parris Lounge

250 Quincy Market Building, Faneuil Hall Marketplace, Boston; 617-248-8800

Faneuil Hall's new favorite offers live music, a mellow lounge room and an adjoining Irish bar, all in a huge lofted space unlike any other in Boston. The after-work crowd gives way to a younger, partying demographic around 10 pm. A word to the wise: Get there early—this place gets seriously popular.

Felt

533 Washington St., Boston;
617-350-5555; www.feltboston.com

Felt's three floors (soon to be four) offer a little bit of everything, whether you want to sit and dine, mingle over cocktails, shoot pool or any combination thereof. The Ritz downtown has been known to send its celebrity guests here (the cast of Mystic River was so impressed that Sean Penn had his birthday bash here) and it's become Playboy's fave destination for local bunny-filled events.

IMPROPER BOSTONIAN

ADDITION TO THE SMALL STAGE

Jimmy Tingle's Off Broadway

255 Elm St., Somerville; 617-591-1616;
www.jimmytingle.com

This Cambridge-born comedian had a regular gig on 60 Minutes II for two seasons and has appeared on just about every late-night talk show we can think of, so it might surprise you to hear that he's interested in making other people famous. His Davis Square venue, dedicated to presenting new work by emerging artists, opened last November with Tingle's own one-man show, but the performances that have graced its stage since January hint at the eclectic smorgasbord to come. The 203-seat room is versatile enough to accommodate anything from an intimate poetry reading to a performance by an up-and-coming new band, and at a time when theater, dance and musical groups can't find space to present their work, it's a welcome addition to the metro Boston performing arts scene.

ART-HOUSE MOVIE THEATER

Kendall Square Cinema

1 Kendall Square, Cambridge; 617-494-9800;
www.landmarktheatres.com

Call it the thinking person's multiplex. Those who aren't interested in Hollywood's latest offerings of suspenseless suspense, recycled laughs, gratuitous T&A or nonstop explosions can thank their lucky stars for this cinematic oasis. Offering the best in independent and foreign films, the theater boasts nine screens with comfortable seating and a superior concession stand that sells everything from Sour Patch Kids to espresso. As part of the nationwide Landmark Theatres chain, it offers all the amenities of a mainstream theater while retaining a distinct art-house feel—in other words, the movie might have subtitles, but there's no musty smell or tattered carpeting.

BEST KEPT SECRET

Jorge Hernandez Cultural Center

Villa Victoria, 85 West Newton St., Boston; 617-927-1781; www.jhcconline.org

You've got to love any place that once hosted a Jewish/Latino dance night called "Salsa with Chutzpah." For years, this converted church tucked onto a side street in the South End has been home to some of the most offbeat yet happening evenings in Boston, ranging from burlesque revival groups reveling in the double entendres of vaudeville-style entertainment to Peruvian musical ensembles showcasing that country's musical heritage. The programming skews toward the Latin American, like weekly salsa, merengue or tango lessons, but there's often some sort of quirky twist. With stained-glass windows, lofty ceilings and a balcony reached by a graceful curving staircase, it's also an ideal rental space for private functions.

COMEDY ACT

Robbie Printz

www.robbieprintz.com

It seems like all good stand-up hinges on pointing out the absurdities of everyday life that you've never noticed before, and Printz is a genius at this. His act has been called "clean cut," and it's a refreshing departure from the obscenity-laden schtick many of his colleagues rely on. He began his comedy career as a Bentley undergrad and has since performed at some of the country's most renowned comedy clubs and has appeared on Comedy Central, MTV and NBC. Winner of the 2002 Boston International Comedy & Movie Festival's best stand-up award, he's among the most requested acts on college campuses and still makes frequent stops at local venues. We're predicting that it won't be long before this hot young talent is one of the biggest names in comedy.

We're surprised the place doesn't sell diapers, since a night out at this Faneuil Hall loony bin promises enough laughs to have you wetting your pants. Seven nights a week, the stage is home to a lineup of the biggest names in the business along with up-and-coming schleppers (local comedians take the stage Sunday through Wednesday, with weekends reserved for national acts), and the convivial crowd seated at both communal and private tables convulses with laughter. A foolproof way to lift your spirits, it's an ab workout and a night on the town rolled into one.

"One" truly is the loneliest number at Harvard Square's legendary revival house, where frequent double bills have kept discerning movie buffs fully satisfied for decades. This year, the Brattle is celebrating its 50th anniversary with all kinds of special cinematic treats. Whether it's back-to-back James Bond action, a double dose of Hitchcock suspense, a pair of Italian classics from the '60s or a duet of French film-noir favorites, the creative programming offers double the pleasure for budget-conscious film fanatics.

Súgán Theatre Company

Boston Center for the Arts, 539 Tremont St., Boston;

In a town with more O'Briens than the Dublin phone book and an Irish pub on every street corner, it's perhaps not surprising to find a small theater company dedicated to showcasing contemporary Irish and Celtic plays. What is surprising is its consistent excellence. In its 11-year history (the last five as a resident company at the Boston Center for the Arts), this niche troupe has presented works by Samuel Beckett, Frank McGuinness and Tom Murphy, and has mined Boston's rich vein of Irish theatrical and creative talent to offer diverse perspectives on modern Ireland. A captivating cast of talented actors and a commitment to presenting new works have earned the Súgán the adulation of critics and audiences alike. Whether Irish eyes are smiling, crying or transfixed in amazement, the Súgán never fails to connect with its audience, which includes people of Celtic descent as well as those who just appreciate good theater.

PETA might not approve of the name, but funky beats and an original sound have garnered a fanatical following for this sextet, which mixes stylistic traditions and shifts between written scores and improvisation. Whether behind the mixing board or behind the mike, on his own or with his crew, the Electric Company, Insight has been laying his unique stamp on a substantial piece of Boston's hip-hop sound in recent years. A self-proclaimed control freak, Insight rhymes over beats he makes himself and runs his own production lab. He has collaborated with rap artist Dagger for his Maysun Project, played underground punk rock shows and recorded with hip-hop living legend KRS-ONE. And his beats helped fuel local MC Mr. Lif's rise to the national spotlight. Insight's second full-length album, Blast Radius, will be released this fall.

It's an idea with endless entertainment potential: Two musicians seated opposite each other at grand pianos face off in an interactive musical duel driven by audience requests. For anyone too shy to try karaoke, it's participatory without being intimidating. And for anyone hankering for affordable live entertainment, it's a night out that won't break the bank. The remarkably versatile and surprisingly witty performers have a gigantic repertoire that encompasses TV theme songs, show tunes, rock and even hip-hop, and half the fun is watching their fingers fly over a rendition of something improbable like a Metallica or Eminem song. The dinner-theater decor lends the proceedings an appropriately laid-back feel, but if you want a table (as opposed to standing room), reservations are recommended because they get booked weeks in advance. Be forewarned: Bachelorette parties are common and audience sing-alongs inevitable.

few inebriated regulars picking the peanuts out of the bar mix. This is karaoke as it's meant to be: goofy, loud and center-stage. Mary, the evening's emcee, gets everyone in the mood with a song of her own and then introduces the brave and/or foolhardy souls anxious for a turn at the mike. With more than 2,000 songs to choose from, there's a sappy ballad, rock anthem or high school favorite to suit every taste, and the rare lulls in the action are gamely filled in by Mary, who also humors regulars with a stage name. The retro sci-fi decor adds the appropriate cheese factor, while old-fashioned candlepin bowling offers an alternative diversion to anyone who tires of playing American Idol.

Grand doesn't begin to describe this monster of a movie theater, which boasts stadium seating, digital sound and 19 screens showing Hollywood's hottest flicks. The lobby decor is ancient-Egyptian-temple-meets-Vegas-casino, with soaring ceilings, painted pillars and enough razzle-dazzle to stun the most jaded moviegoer, making it a throwback to the days when a cinema's atmosphere was half the experience. Rounding out the big picture is a concession stand that offers an extensive menu including treats like funnel cakes and chicken tenders. A movie palace fit for Hollywood royalty.

New York of course has Soho, Noho and Tribeca. And as the latest symptom of Boston's NYC inferiority complex, we now have our SoWa and NoWa districts. The trendy abbreviations seem to be gaining ground in the Hub, and while we think Bostonians will eventually get used to—or who knows, maybe even develop an affection for—the new almost-acronyms, we couldn't help but chuckle when we saw the latest one. This year, the prestigious Copley Society of Art (the country's oldest nonprofit art association) adopted the giggle-inducing Co | So logo as part of its new marketing strategy. But whereas urban districts and Hollywood stars (think P. Diddy and J. Lo) manage to pull it off, Co | So is a no | go in our book.

For 65 years, this Brookline landmark has provided one of the most compelling reasons to visit Coolidge Corner. With an array of imaginative mixed-media offerings, it goes way beyond the typical art house or revival cinema and keeps getting bigger and better (just check out the state-of-the-art neon marquee). In addition to offering cutting-edge foreign and independent films and documentaries, the Coolidge has a small screening room that showcases experimental films that would never stand a chance of screening elsewhere. Executive director Joe Zina and his creative staff consistently come up with unusual film series, including the popular midnight movies.

Cabaret cognoscenti understand that music is just the beginning. Ambience, intimacy, decor and (perhaps more than anything else) appropriate lighting are equally crucial, and this cozy, softly lit lounge delivers on all fronts. Performers and audience are so close they could touch (and often they seem to want to), while the repertoire ranges from American songbook standards and smoky-throated torch songs to pop/rock, blues and more funky, cutting-edge material. REASON TO ASK FOR A REFUND

Puppetry of the Penis

An adolescent pastime turned into a puerile (but blessedly short) evening of theater. That's not to say it isn't funny to watch this pair of buck-naked Aussies twist their privates into more than 40 different shapes, ranging from the Eiffel Tower to the Loch Ness Monster. However, there's a little more Down Under on display than is aesthetically appealing (especially with a big screen simulcasting the scrotal shenanigans in close-up). Men will find themselves crossing their legs tightly and saying, "Ouch." Women will find themselves wondering why guys don't groom down there. The initial shock wears off quickly, and what's left is a lingering sense that Puppetry of the Penis is Australian for "35 bucks to watch two guys play with themselves."

Since its debut last fall, the series has made regular stops at the Lizard Lounge and showcased an ever-changing roster of writers. Founders Bob Dubrow and Andy Hong are the former host and the off-and-on engineer, respectively, of the live local music show Pipeline on WMBR-FM. Their project of recording their favorite tunes by local musicians eventually grew into a full-blown independent music label. With eight releases in the past year and a roster of artists like the Pee Wee Fist, 27, Blake Hazard, Thalia Zedek, Chris Brokaw, Seana Carmody, Torrez and Tiger Saw, Kimchee's offerings range from indie rock to pop, reflecting Dubrow and Hong's willingness to record anything that makes their ears tingle. Artistic integrity is guaranteed by Dubrow's stated goal that "we're not looking for anyone to get famous, just to get heard." Sounds like something those slackers in Seattle might have said before grunge caught on.

ROCK BAND

Choo Choo la Rouge

www.choochoolarouge.com

This band's debut EP, Wall to Wall, has us holding our breath until they release a full-length CD. This local three-piece outfit has a roots-oriented rock sound that often combines with happy-go-lucky beats. Singer and lead guitarist Vince Scorziello's lyrical musings and guitar work waft over Chris Lynch's fluid bass lines and Jon Langmead's tight drumming in material that ranges from quirky to mellow and goes well beyond the predictable. No wonder the crowd that shows up for their gigs is building to a critical mass.

Known for outrageous on-stage antics, white face paint and vintage-cabaret fashion sense, the Dolls (a.k.a. Amanda Palmer and Brian Viglione) have outgrown their original home at the Lizard Lounge and now appear at venues around town. The element of improvisation promises a surprise in every performance from the inventive, out-there duo.

TRADE

Shea Hillenbrand for Byung-Hyun Kim

Being a team player can mean different things in different sports—assists in basketball, sacrifices in baseball—but the term always applies to a player's ability to elevate a team's performance. In that respect, Shea Hillenbrand is the biggest team player of the Red Sox season. With his impressive bat and his low, low salary, Hillenbrand was trade bait from opening day. We were sad to see such a hard-working guy get shipped out, but Hillenbrand was a fair price to pay for Byung-Hyun Kim, whose versatility as a starter or closer has already significantly upgraded the pitching staff. At 24 years old, he could also be a building block for the future, so we needn't worry that the Hillenbrand-Kim trade is the Jeff Bagwell–Larry Andersen of the 21st century.

BEST DRESSED

Vin Baker in Anything but a Celtics Uniform

It's always interesting, after a trade, to read the other side's opinions in the sports pages. When the Celtics acquired Vin Baker last summer, Seattle Post-Intelligencer columnist Art Thiel wrote, "The three-year quest to unload Baker finally found a victim, but NBA propriety precluded saying something like, 'How stupid are the Celtics?! Who cares!!'" Baker, who still has three more years left on his contract, was a disaster for the Celtics. Last year he made $12,375,000. That works out to $45,833 for each of the 270 total points he scored. The Celtics still made it to the second round of the playoffs, but it's easy to wonder what might have been if Baker's salary was being paid to a player (or players) who actually, you know, played. Here's to hoping that he straightens out his personal life, both for his own good and that of the team.

BEST-KEPT SECRET

Tim Wakefield

In all the discussion about the Red Sox pitching staff, one name you don't hear very often is Tim Wakefield. That's because he's not emotionally volatile, prone to injury or a frequent actor in awful performances. But last year the veteran knuckleballer finished with 11 wins and five losses—and had a 2.81 ERA. That's low for any pitcher, let alone one whose pitches float down off the mound slow enough that you can go get a sandwich between his wind-up and the ball's meandering trip across the plate. Opposing hitters often take ugly, Little League–looking hacks at Wakefield's dancing pitches, confirming that the secret of the knuckleball is safe in Boston.

FEMALE ATHLETE

Maren Meinert

This native of Rheinhausen, Germany, puts the blitz in the Boston Breakers' offense. At press time she led the team with eight goals, and her teammates no doubt appreciate the fact that last season she led the entire league in assists, with 15. We'll no doubt wish she was on our side during the upcoming Women's World Cup (she's scored 25 career goals for the German national team), but for the summer we'll just be happy that Meinert's a Breaker.

HEART

New England Revolution

Things didn't look too good for the Revolution last summer. On Aug. 18 they were in last place in the East and at the bottom of the league standings, and making the playoffs seemed about as likely as David Beckham showing up at Gillette Stadium wearing a sarong and asking if he might sub in. But the Revs didn't give up, going 5-0-1 in their next six games to squeak their way into the playoffs. They then came one goal away from winning the entire championship, losing 1-0 in double overtime to the Los Angeles Galaxy before 61,316 fans at Gillette. Coach Steve Nicol won MLS Coach of the Year for the stunning turnaround, and fans got to enjoy a great run by the Revolution, the latest New England sports underdog to prove its bite.

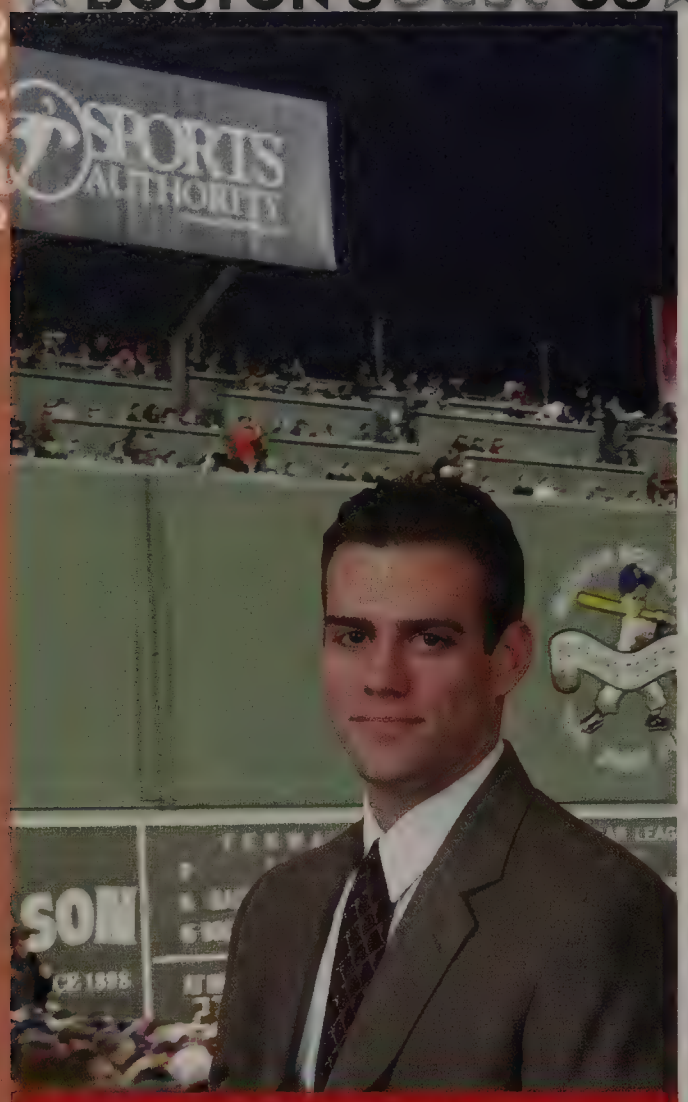
INSPIRATIONAL ATHLETE

Troy Brown

Statistically speaking, Troy Brown didn't have a great year with the Patriots last season, catching passes for a total of 890 yards. A large part of the reason that he was off his career-best 1,199-yard 2001 season was a knee injury that undoubtedly cost him yards after the catch. However, in an era where athletes are coddled through the smallest blisters and booboos, it was impressive that Brown and his bum knee missed only two regular season games. At the end of the season, Brown said, "I think it was a good effort, playing hurt most of the year, just sucking it up and playing tough and playing hard football. That's what you've got to do. Injuries are going to come in football, and you've just got to find a way to overcome them and get out there and help your team win." Enough said.

☆BOSTON'S best '03☆



NEW ADDITION

Theo Epstein and the Green Monster Seats (tie)

In his first season, the Red Sox's young general manager has worn his cloak of authority well. It's too early to say how his maneuverings will pay off in the long run, but thus far his offensive pickups have proven fruitful (Kevin Millar, Bill Mueller and Todd Walker, to name three), and the Hillenbrand-Kim trade shows that he's serious about addressing the 2003 team's greatest weakness: pitching. And while baseball GM-manship isn't a popularity contest, it doesn't hurt that Epstein's far more accessible than his predecessor, Dan Duquette. When you've got a 29-year-old GM and fans are munching Fenway Franks atop the Green Monster, the major question becomes "World Series? Why not?"

JUGGERNAUT

The Red Sox Offense

Did Mayor Menino pass a law this spring that makes it illegal to bat under .300? It sometimes seems that way for the Red Sox starting lineup, who, with the exception of Johnny Damon, are all usually at or above the .300 mark. The team batted .308 in May and a league-leading .315 in June. Even Byung-Hyun Kim is batting .333, and the Red Sox bats continue to fell records (most notably, scoring 10 runs against the Marlins before a single out was recorded in the first inning). Now, about that bullpen...

MOST IN NEED OF A NEW MASCOT

The Celtics

OK, Lucky the Leprechaun is unique, we'll give him that. But his insane grin is simply frightening. And isn't a giant leprechaun something of an oxymoron? The dilemma for the Celtics is what they'd replace him with. A clover? A plate of corned beef and cabbage? That would look strange with arms and a face. We hereby propose "Lucky the Dog," who would be a big, cuddly dog—an Irish wolfhound, of course.

MVP

Joe Thornton

Happily, Boston is home to several athletes who could justifiably win this award, but the nod goes to the Bruins' Joe Thornton, who, at the tender age of 24, has become one of the premier players in the NHL. Last year he finished third in the NHL in points (101) and second in assists, with 65. He also became the first player to rack up more than 100 points while also spending more than 100 minutes in the Sin Bin since Eric Lindros did it in 1995-96 (we're looking forward to seeing what he can do once he cuts down those penalty minutes). Thornton was the top pick overall in the 1997 draft, and we think it's safe to say that he's living up to his potential.

TIME-WILL-TELL DEAL

Tebucky Jones for Three Draft Picks

Whenever you deal a proven player for draft picks, as the Patriots did with Tebucky Jones, you're taking a risk. In this case, the Pats gambled that they could deal Jones to New Orleans, fill his spot with a capable, if older, player (Pro Bowler Rodney Harrison) and spend the difference upgrading other areas of the team and developing younger players. Whether or not the draft picks work out taking this route was at least better than simply letting Jones walk away a free agent. But we'll have to wait until fall to find out how safe the Patriots are at safety. ⊶

ROOKIE OF THE YEAR

J.R. Bremer

No Boston sports team introduced a standout rookie of Garciaparra proportions this year, but the Celtics' J.R. Bremer spent the winter quietly establishing himself as a respectable guard in the NBA. The former St. Bonaventure star averaged just 8.3 points per game, but his 25-point outburst against the Clippers in March demonstrated strong potential. He also has a nice touch from behind the arc, ranking third in the NBA last season with 3.23 three-pointers per 48 minutes. Where he'll fit into the puzzle next year, when draft pick Marcus Banks will almost certainly be the go-to point guard, is unclear, but Bremer's rookie year solidified his place in the NBA.

ASPHALT STRIPTEASE

Zakim Bridge/Route 93 North

Just when you were starting to think the Big Dig was an elaborate ruse and nothing had actually happened below the torn-up streets of the city, Route 93 North went underground and the Leonard P. Zakim Bunker Hill Bridge (named for the beloved Anti-Defamation League activist) came to life. Of course there were still slow periods at rush hour, but the wider traffic corridor so improved the flow that state police soon discovered that motorists were exceeding the 45 mph speed limit in the tunnel by, oh, 30 mph. More important than the actual mobility improvement brought by the new 93 North segment, however, is the promise that it bestowed: light at the end of the Big Dig tunnel.

BATHROOM

Houston's

Ladies, be warned: The Houston's men's room is so palatial that guys might go missing for the better part of the night. The loo decor is traditional, with lots of custom woodwork and marble. But the hardware is high-tech enough to titillate the most hard-core plumbing enthusiast. Above the urinals are flat-screen TVs that display guy-friendly programming like sporting events, and after you wash up under an automatic faucet in a black marble sink, C Towels (those thick, expensive-feeling paper towels) await. We hear the food is pretty decent at Houston's too.

The Public Garden is an ideal place to steal a kiss or three, especially at night. It offers a slew of private spots while still managing to provide the thrill of being well, public. So whether the ducklings make way for smoochers or the Swan Boats bear witness to some spirited snogging, there isn't a more scenic spot in the city to put away your PDA and enjoy a little PDA.

BUSKER

Banjo Bob

"Banjo Bob" Sundstrom is a major figure in Boston's underground music scene—the literal underground music scene, that is. A Park Street station fixture, Banjo Bob and his Dixieland tunes from the '20s and '30s are a welcome contrast to the cacophony of trains and shuffling clamor of stressed-out passengers that define the Green Line. If you see the Chicago native plucking his strings on the platform, consider padding his banjo case with a Washington or two. After all, what price an island of art in the sea of the T?

GRACE UNDER FIRE

Donna Morrissey

Soon after Donna Morrissey assumed her position as spokeswoman for the Archdiocese of Boston in early 2001, the church's sexual abuse scandals blew up. Though she left her job in May of this year, she was the public face of the church at the height of the scandal, the unlucky messenger who regularly confronted the media's torrent of questions. Some opine that she should have delivered a few more explanations and a few less no-comments, but Morrissey held her own while serving in a job that is the definition of "unenviable position."

MALE VOCALIST

American Idol*'s Edgar Nova

Possibly the most gruesome audition on last season's American Ido belonged to Boston's own Edgar Nova, whose warbling rendition of Enrique Iglesias' "Escape" prompted Simon Cowell to declare, "You're one of the worst singers I've ever heard." Even the affable Randy Jackson advised, "Don't sing anymore...ever." Not to be discouraged, Nova told his fellow hopefuls, "See you in Hollywood," and was escorted from the premises by security when he returned to do an encore. Nova may not have been Clay Aiken or Ruben Studdard, but he was the most entertaining also-ran of the year.

MOST MISSED

Robert McCloskey

The Make Way for Ducklings author, who once lived on Beacon Hill's Myrtle Street, died June 30 at age 88. Bu his legacy, which includes the row of bronze ducks in the Public Garden (one of the most popular photo ops in the city for the Pampers set), will waddle on to the delight of happy kids for generations to come.

PARTY YOU WEREN'T INVITED TO Saint Opening

When people are ponying up $10,000 apiece for membership to a club, there's going to be some type of soiree to commemorate its debut. Saint definitely threw the most exclusive bash last year. Produced by Bryan Rafanelli, it featured Cirque du Soleil–style dancers and contortionists at the door, while inside, lucky wealthy folk like Billy Joel indulged in a bacchanalia of champagne and high-end edibles. (The brushed-steel invitations were quite nice too.) It was everything you'd expect of a party with a $10,000 cover charge.

PLACE FOR A FIRST DATE
Fenway Park

What's more romantic than taking in a game at one of the country's oldest, quaintest ballparks? There's a lively atmosphere, but it's usually quiet enough that you can still hold a conversation. If a painful silence arises, you can always make a trip to the beer vendor or, crazy as it might sound, pay attention to the game. If things go well, you can join the thirsty throngs postgame at one of the area's many fine beverage purveyors. But if you and your companion strike out in the chemistry department, there's no harm in parting ways at Gate A.

PLACE TO BREAK UP
Fenway Park

While Fenway is a great first-date venue, it's also well-suited to a last date. Think about it: It's noisy, crowded, there are multiple exits, and security has already frisked your soon-to-be ex for potential weapons. Downside: It would be a shame to waste a $4.50 Coors Light by getting it dumped on your head.

WORST PLACE TO MAKE OUT
The Christian Science Plaza

Oh, it might look inviting on a warm summer night: the reflecting pool, surrounded by tall buildings that cast shadows into corners here and there, perhaps a bit of moonlight shining through to lend a moody sexiness to the scene. You're not planning on pulling an Opie and Anthony stunt, but it might be appealingly naughty to duck into one of those shadows for a quick smooch. And then: flashlight in your face! That's right; they're on their toes at the Mother Church, and security guards roam the grounds at night to discourage sinners. Move along, folks, move along. ⟶

Boston Public Library President Bernie Margolis

With the passing of the Children's Internet Protection Act (which links government funding to public libraries' use of Internet filters) and the USA Patriot Act in the past two years, the line between public safety and intrusive government oversight continues to grow fuzzier. "Our approach has been very persistent to be sure that people understand their First Amendment rights and to be sure [those rights] are not trampled upon," Margolis says. "The library needs to be a safe place for people, not only physically, but for using materials that may be controversial or out of the mainstream without Big Brother lurking in the corner monitoring what they've done." In a city with a history of banning everything from Hemingway to Snow White, we're glad to have a guy like Margolis fighting on the front lines of the censorship war.

BROADCAST PIONEER

Natalie Jacobson, Anchor/Reporter, WCVB-TV NewsCenter 5

Little more than a decade ago, Boston's TV news anchors were among its celebrities, equal in status to its mayor and its professional athletes. Back then, we were on a first-name basis with an elite group, including Liz and Jack, Tony and Tom, and Chet and Natalie. Today, there is Natalié. After more than 30 years with WCVB-TV, Natalie Jacobson has survived a succession of news directors, a very public split with husband/co-anchor Chet Curtis, and a new world order spurred by the rise of Channel 7, with its generic anchors and reporters. Jacobson ("Nat" to all—except, perhaps, John Silber) has seen Boston through elections, presidential visits, marathons and most of the major events of the past three decades. The first woman to anchor an evening newscast in Boston, her longevity is all the more impressive because it is based not on hype but on credibility with viewers. The last real star in Boston television news continues to be its brightest.

BUSINESS COLUMNIST

Cosmo Macero Jr., Boston Herald

He got the inside story on the frosty relationship between Massachusetts Taxpayers Foundation President Michael Widmer and the Romney administration. He continued as point man for the Boston Herald's award-winning reporting on the Red Sox sale. But our favorite story by business columnist Cosmo Macero this year involved what he characterized as a "shakedown" of the Boston Globe by a neighborhood civics association. Macero made a strong case that the Globe caved in to the group's demand for coverage in exchange for support of the paper's plant expansion project. "The Boston Globe has done a turnaround," the group's liaison to the paper told Macero after a Globe article addressed its concerns. "They are now more supportive of the community." The Globe's PR flack concluded, "I don't think one of these things has to do with another." For the Herald, we don't think it gets any better than this.

GOSSIP COLUMNISTS

Gayle Fee and Laura Raposa, Boston Herald

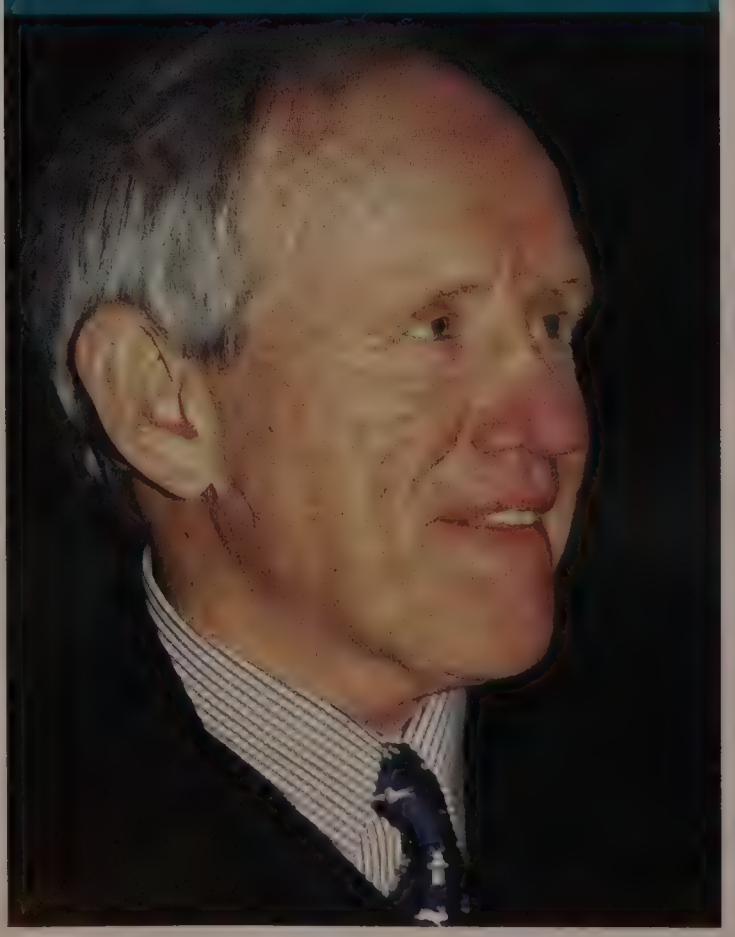
We see you on the T every morning, skipping over the news on the president's economic summit and the latest MCAS controversy to the real scoops: Derek Jeter's visit to Saint with his new pals from Centerfolds; the identity of J. Lo's "booty double"; and Val Kilmer's shirtless greeting at XV Beacon. And now that the Herald's two gossip pages have been consolidated into a two-page spread, it's easier than ever to get your daily gossip fix.

HALL OF FAME INDUCTEE

Will McDonough, Boston Globe Sports Reporter/Columnist, 1960-2001 (Freelance Columnist, 2001-2003)

For all his years as a columnist, Will McDonough was never known as a great writer. "I'm not even sure he liked to write," fellow Globe sportswriter Bob Ryan observed. "Forget the writing part. Will McDonough was the greatest sports reporter of all." That assessment was echoed by one colleague after another following the death of the legendary sports reporter last January. Dan Shaughnessy went so far as to suggest that McDonough's cubicle at the Globe be permanently retired. McDonough's endurance (41 years with the Globe, all 38 Super Bowls covered, countless sources developed) inspired that kind of admiration. He was a mentor to a generation of sports reporters, and his ability to break a story made his column the first place sports fans turned. "Whatever Will McDonough printed in his Sunday column was the most insight on the NFL people were going to get all week," then CBS Sports producer Ted Shaker (now at NBC) told the Globe, explaining his controversial decision to hire a print journalist "with a face for radio and a voice for newspapers." McDonough himself once said, "I proved once and for all you don't have to be pretty to be on television." To his readers, and even his viewers, Will McDonough looked pretty darn good.



LIVING/ARTS COLUMNIST

Alex Beam, Boston Globe

Alex Beam's favorite muse—Boston University chancellor John Silber—isn't in the spotlight so much anymore, but the well has hardly run dry. After 16 years the Beamer continues to find plenty of inspirational annoyances in everyday life, from the poetry of Maya Angelou ("prolific hack") to the career of Celine Dion ("world's most cloying human") to the culture of Sweden ("the land of sex, suicide and socialism"). Boston's answer to Christopher Buckley also displays frequent self-deprecating wit. "The silliest thing I have read lately," begins a recent column, "not under my own byline, that is…"

NEIGHBORHOOD NEWSPAPER

The Back Bay Courant

A good test of any neighborhood newspaper is how well it reflects the voice of its community. Boston's Back Bay Courant serves a variety of constituencies: students in the Fenway, the upscale residents of the Newbury Street and Beacon Hill areas, and the rainbow coalition of the South End. The Courant meets the challenge of reflecting its eclectic population, with a mix of stories ranging from the hard-hitting (local development, groundwater problems) to the offbeat ("Ask Diesel Dog," an advice column for yet another notable Back Bay constituency). Boston's own BBC does a notable job of keeping this noteworthy neighborhood au courant.

RADIO DUO

Matt Siegel and Billy Costa, WXKS-FM

There's no mistaking who is the star of "Matty in the Morning" on KISS-108, but News and Entertainment Director Billy Costa is far more than a sidekick to host Matt Siegel. Like Conan and Andy, or Howard and Robin, Matty and Billy have the kind of easygoing, genuine rapport that's behind every winning team; and after 12 years of hosting the station's top-rated show together, this duo remains as dynamic as ever.

RADIO REVIVAL

WBOS 92.9FM

If you're reading this now, there's a good chance you're a 'BOS listener. The station's internal research shows "an amazingly high correlation between IM PROPER readership and WBOS listenership." The outlook wasn't always so positive at WBOS. Three years ago, the corporate owners of this perennial underperformer were on the verge of replacing its ill-defined album-rock format with FM talk. At the last moment they decided to hire a new program director and give album rock one more try. Today, the music is focused, the jocks sound like they enjoy playing it, listener numbers are up (by 27 percent, according to a recent ratings book), and WBOS finally has the one thing it always seemed to lack: an identity.

• • • • • • • • • • • • • • • •

RADIO TALK SHOW HOST

Robin Young, Here & Now, WBUR

Another radio survival—and revival—story also began two years ago. That was when Robin Young was named co-host of WBUR's newsmagazine, Here & Now, following an ill-fitted shift as a DJ at the (formerly) moribund WBOS. Back then, we hailed her return to radio as "Best Media Personality Comeback," a title Young has more than lived up to. Whether she's talking with Johnny Pesky, John Malkovich or Mario Cuomo, this former co-host of TV's Evening Magazine has the rare ability to forget she's on the radio and be herself: naturally curious, focused and perceptive. May she stay forever Young.

SCOOP

Globe Big Dig/Bechtel story

How much would taxpayers know today about the Big Dig's massive cost overruns without the Boston Globe's ongoing investigation? How much would the state be able to recover from Bechtel/Parsons Brinckerhoff, the project's private-sector manager, without the information the paper uncovered—or the state inspector general's inquiry that followed? The subject was more technical and less salacious than the Catholic Church sex abuse scandals touched off by the Globe's Pulitzer prize–winning investigation of that story. Yet the paper's coverage of both had a powerful impact. "I think they're very comparable," says Chris Daly, a former State House reporter, now an associate professor of journalism at Boston University College of Communication. "In both cases, what you see is an institution, the Boston Globe, that has the resources and is willing to take the initiative to look into the performance of other very powerful institutions." The Globe's ambitious, tenacious reporting on the $14.6 billion Central Artery/Tunnel Project was more than a "scoop." It was a big dig.

TAG TEAM

WCVB Meteorologists Harvey Leonard and Dick Albert

When WCVB announced it was adding Harvey Leonard to its already ample staff last June, our first thought was, "How many marquee meteorologists does one television station really need?" After all, Channel 5 already had its own chief meteorologist in Dick Albert, a fixture at the station since 1978. Raiding ratings leader Channel 7, Leonard's home for 25 years, seemed like little more than an act of revenge, destined to cause friction between longtime rivals. But behind the scenes, Leonard and Albert also had a personal history that spanned 20 years, a friendship that has made their roles as co-chief meteorologists complementary. Albert handles the 5 and 6 pm newscasts, while Leonard is on at 5:30 and 11 pm. So far, it's been a smooth segue, giving Channel 5 two of the most experienced, and popular, forecasters in Boston television. ⊷

COLLEGE RADIO STATION

WERS 88.9 FM

Sure, WBUR is more "professional." The only students you're likely to hear on air are the ones who call in to Car Talk. Real college radio is about training students as well as entertaining listeners—and the Emerson College station does an excellent job of both. As the only entirely student-run operation in a major radio market, WERS offers an eclectic range of programming that includes more than 20 varieties of music, from folk and reggae to show tunes and a cappella.

WELCOME HOME

In this low chapter in the book publishing business, in which nearly as many titles go out of print each year as get published, Boston has one shining star: 170-year-old Houghton Mifflin. Little, Brown & Co. got bought up and hauled to New York to become part of the AOL Time Warner empire, and Houghton got snapped up by French conglomerate Vivendi Universal. But when Vivendi decided to sell, it was local firms Bain Capital and Thomas H. Lee Partners that bought, for $1.66 billion. Plans for the debt-ridden company are unclear, especially with the recent resignation of president and CEO Hans Gieskes. But at least Boston's literati can claim one truly local publishing powerhouse again.

BIGGEST CRASH, NON-TECH

Hill & Barlow

It defended Nicola Sacco and Bartolomeo Vanzetti. It launched three Massachusetts governors. It lived for 107 years, and it came crashing down in a matter of days. The venerable firm's entire 33-lawyer real estate group stunned everyone in December by leaving en masse for Piper Rudnick LLP, and days later the 44 partners voted to dissolve the company, which employed nearly 300 people. Within a month, according to one report, all but 13 of the firm's lawyers had left, as companies like Fish & Richardson and Ropes & Gray snatched up whole practices of the imploded firm. The already topsy-turvy local legal scene turned into chaos. While other law firms announced layoffs, mergers and restructurings, none came close to matching the sudden, completely unexpected death of Hill & Barlow.

BIGGEST CRASH, TECH

StorageNetworks Inc.

When the Waltham data-storage company went public in late 2000, its shares soared to $150, annual revenues surpassed $100 million, and people in the industry considered it a serious challenger to EMC and IBM. Last year, losses totaled more than $75 million, and in January, half the employees got sacked at the same time that co-founder Peter Bell left as president and CEO in order to "pursue other personal and business interests." By late June the company abandoned its managed-service business, eliminating another 35 percent of its staff, leaving just 60 employees from a high of about 600. Today, with shares selling for a buck and change, rumors have the company trying to sell off anything left of value. Meanwhile, the new executives are holding a pile of $200 million in cash and are actively looking to buy a completely new business that has, according to a press release, "revenues, established channels and leading technology." In other words, what StorageNetworks had three years ago.

BIGGEST EXECUTIVE WINDFALL

John Hancock Financial Services Inc.

John Hancock's sales and net income dropped in 2002, resulting in workforce reduction, sale of its eponymous tower and rumors of a merger. Nevertheless, CEO David D'Alessandro earned a tidy $21.7 million for the year's work. Such heady days are over, however; the company is reportedly cutting D'Alessandro's pay to a more modest $14 million for 2003. There could be a onetime financial boon coming on top of that, however: the Boston Globe has reported that the sale of the company's group life insurance business to MetLife, announced in June, could net Hancock's top five executives a total of $116 million in cash and stock value. (Company officials, meanwhile, say the figure would be closer to $97 million.)

BIGGEST SALE (LITERALLY)

John Hancock Financial Services Inc.

In the recent spate of big-building acquisitions, none looms larger than the sale of the 60-story Hancock Tower. This March, Hancock sold the skyscraper, along with buildings at 197 Clarendon Street and 200 Berkeley Street, for a whopping $910 million to Beacon Capital Partners. With some 3 million square feet in all, the properties represent one of the biggest sales ever in the Hub both in size and money, and the sale demonstrated the persistent optimism about Boston's metropolitan office space. Beacon Capital expects to more than make back the sale price through rent—including, of course, tenant John Hancock—which agreed to a long-term lease as part of the sale.

CONTROVERSIAL NEW BUSINESS

Personal Physicians Health Care

"Concierge medicine" came to Boston last year when Dr. Steven Flier and Dr. Jordan Busch—a couple of normal, albeit highly successful, Beth Israel Deaconess primary care physicians—opened this Chestnut Hill practice. Instead of serving 3,000 patients each at normal (insurance-covered) rates, each PPHC doctor accepts an exclusive roster of 300 who are willing to pay a $4,000 per individual out-of-pocket annual fee in exchange for more personal and devoted attention. Critics appeared everywhere from the Globe to NBC Nightly News to warn that "concierge medicine" would lead to a chasm with good doctors serving the wealthy few and the rest of society herded like cattle through a second-tier health care world. Undaunted, several other "concierge" practices in the Boston area have followed PPHC's lead, and the idea looks like it will be with us for a while.

MOST PUBLIC INTERNAL DISPUTE

Unicco Service Co.

Some companies settle their labor problems quietly. Some suffer through a small round of picketing and buried-in-the-business-section newspaper articles. Unicco, a 5,500-employee janitorial service in Newton, was another story. Its janitors went on strike last fall for several weeks, gathering by the hundreds in front of some of downtown Boston's biggest office buildings and staging high-profile demonstrations. Every day brought fresh front-page news, mostly negative for Unicco. The Service Employees International Union, hoping to make the confrontation a national referendum on benefits for part-time employees, kicked in $1 million to the strike fund, brought charges against Unicco to the National Labor Relations Board, and set up Uniccodirt.com on the Web. Tenants demanded that owners of high-profile buildings, such as 18 Tremont Street, fire Unicco on principle. Governor Jane Swift broke the state's contract with the company. Even wing-tipped executives sided with the janitors, with the former chief executive of Stride Rite Corp. pledging to donate $500,000 to the strike fund and John Hancock Financial Services saying it would be willing to pay an extra $1.5 million in cleaning services to ensure good wages and benefits. Unicco gave in to most of the union's demands, and the strike ended , but somehow the smell still lingers.

SIGN OF HARD TIMES

Fidelity Investments

Sure, the Dow Jones hit a five-year low, CMGI had to remove its name from the football stadium, unemployment rose and venture capital disappeared. But until last September, Boston's financial leaders were holding out hope that they could ride it out. Then Fidelity, the world's largest mutual funds company, announced that revenues had declined by $1 billion and it would lay off roughly 1,700 employees including about 900 in Massachusetts. It was the breakin of the dam: In October Boston's oldest mutual fund firm MFS Investment Management, cut 110 jobs; in Novembe Pioneer Investment Management dropped 44 employees; i January FleetBoston Financial Corp. eliminated 1,900 job in April State Street Corp. slashed 1,800 jobs. The feelin seemed to be that if Fidelity couldn't weather this recessio then nobody could.

WORST LITTLE-GUY SCREWING

Stop & Shop Supermarket Co.

Royal Ahold N.V. allegedly used some "irregular accoun ing practices" to overstate earnings by approximately $88 million over the past three years, which came as news of th worst kind to run-of-the-mill employees of Quincy-base Stop & Shop, which is owned by Ahold. Although it's to soon to tell whether the Dutch company's woes will affe the supermarket chain's business, the employees who too part in the company's stock-option plan have seen the savings pummeled by Ahold's 75 percent drop in stoc value. The worst may be yet to come, as Ahold's U.S. ope ations remain under scrutiny (it recently "found" anothe $29 million in errors and also missed the June 30 deadlin for auditing its 2002 books). ⟶

HOLDOUT

The Atlantic Monthly

When Gruner & Jahr USA announced the move of Inc. magazine's operations to New York last fall (to nobody's surprise), the ancient and venerable Atlantic was left as the lone national newsstand magazine published in the Hub. G&J also took Fast Company to the Big Apple, Harvard Business Review cut staff, Boston Law Tribune ceased publication, and IDG converted Darwin to an online-only magazine, among other bad news in the industry. Amid all of this—and the devastating death of editor-at-large Michael Kelly in Iraq—the Atlantic stayed put, and thrived. Superior, relevant, timely features on the World Trade Center, the Iraq War, and the usual obscure-but-interesting subjects earned the magazine renewed interest and the award for general excellence at the American Society of Magazine Editors' 2003 National Magazine Awards.

PATTED

Krispy Kr

You've never even heard of Jan Cos. of Cranston, R.I., but if you're a Krispy Kreme fanatic—and who isn't?—you owe the folks there a big hug. That's the company that owns the New England franchise rights for the doughnut chain. After what seemed like decades of rumors (the first reporting on the impending arrival dates to 2000), groundbreaking began in December at Wellington Circle. The store has now finally opened, prompting numerous fans of the superglazed, made-right-in-front-of-you delicacies to reroute their commutes through Medford. Rumors continue to swirl over future locations (Saugus seems a solid bet, and Dedham just granted Krispy Kreme a special permit for a drive-through window). Randolph-based Dunkin' Donuts insists that it isn't afraid of the competition. Time will tell.

ART SUPPLIES

Pearl Art & Craft Supplies

579 Mass. Ave., Cambridge; 617-547-6600;
www.pearlpaint.com

Whether you're a professional portrait painter or a weekend watercolorist, this Central Square institution has everything you need for your creative endeavors, and if not, employees know where to find it. The staff consists almost exclusively of artists who understand the stuff they're selling, and a gigantic inventory spread over three floors makes this the perfect destination for one-stop shopping. From canvas to paint to frames, Pearl has got you covered through every step of the artistic process. Your arts and crafts teacher from grade school would find nirvana here.

BIKE SHOP

Ace Wheelworks

145 Elm St., Somerville; 617-776-2100;
Belmont Wheelworks, 480 Trapelo Road,
Belmont; 617-489-3577;
Wheelworks Too, 22 Church St., Belmont; 617-484-9247;
www.wheelworks.com

Ace is the No. 1 source for serious cyclists. The bike enthusiasts who work at each location are as dedicated to two-wheeled transportation as the engineers at NASA are to space travel. Ace carries a wide selection of bikes from major manufacturers including Specialized, Cannondale and Trek, along with local custom builders like Independent Fabrication and 7 Cycles. Needless to say, you'll find all the accessories you need, including locks, helmets, bells, whistles and water bottles. However, the ace in the hole is its knowledgeable employees, who are adept at matching bikes with riders, imparting useful information and teaching repair techniques. The three stores have fostered a sense of community among Boston's cyclists. The Somerville location, in particular, catering to bicycle commuters, specializes in repairing older bikes and stocking spare parts.

BOOKSTORE, LOCAL

Brookline Booksmith

279 Harvard St., Brookline; 617-566-6660;
www.brooklinebooksmith.com

Pointing and clicking on a computer screen will never compare with the pleasure of walking through aisles of books, running your fingers across the spines, smelling ink on paper and feeling the solidness of a new work as you hold it in your hands. Our favorite place to do all those things is at this Coolidge Corner jewel. For the past several years, Brookline Booksmith has won this award, not so much because of what it sells but how it sells. In addition to numerous author appearances, poetry readings and other book-related events, the staff has an obvious love of books and will gladly make suggestions or discuss them at length, but they'll also leave you alone while you're browsing. They even have a jar of dog biscuits to placate canine companions. It's the perfect place to pass a leisurely afternoon or stock up on bedside reading, a prime example of why independent bookstores have it over retail or online giants.

BOOKSTORE, USED

Brattle Book Shop

9 West St., Boston; 617-542-0210;
www.brattlebookshop.com

You can keep your wee antiques stores or trendy clothing consignment boutiques. Our favorite previously owned item to buy is books, and Brattle's four floors are stuffed to the rafters with them—at any given time, about 100,000 titles, many bought from estates. The ever-changing inventory ranges from the prosaic (dog-eared copies of Grisham novels) to the exceedingly rare (the shop once sold a handwritten thank-you letter that Charles Dickens wrote to a host he stayed with in Boston during the Christmas holidays), and the prices range accordingly. For anyone with old leather-bound volumes collecting dust in the attic, the shop also does appraisals. "Specializing in not specializing," the store collects volumes on an astonishing array of genres and topics, ensuring that even if you had nothing specific in mind when you walked in (the best way to enter a place like this), you'll have something that fascinates you when you walk out.

CATERING

Max Ultimate Food

100 Magazine St., Boston; 617-427-9799;
www.maxultimatefood.com

During the past year, the age-old party question ("Who did the catering?") has had only one answer: Max Ultimate Food. A full-service caterer, it provides exquisite food and flawless service at many of the city's swankiest social occasions, including events for the American Repertory Theatre, the Institute of Contemporary Art and the Friends of the Public Garden. The caterer's secret lies in going far beyond delivering fantastic food. Staff members are artists at orchestrating the flow of a party, helping the host keep the guests entertained and making sure everyone is looked after. If God is in the details, Max has got divinity down pat.

ELECTRONICS STORE

Tweeter

Various locations throughout Massachusetts;
www.tweeter.com

A gadget freak's dream, Tweeter sells plasma-screen TVs, Surround Sound systems, multiroom audio systems, digital cameras, camcorders, car stereo equipment, minidisc players, MP3 players—in short, just about everything (except computers) that you can plug into a wall for entertainment. Brands include Sony, Phillips, Pioneer, Panasonic, Denon and Yamaha, priced to fit all budgets, from grad student frugality to rap-star extravagance. In addition to the goods, it's got helpful, unpushy salespeople who will offer a tutorial on how to use a product and help with any problems you may encounter once you get it home. Here you get all the advantages of a superstore, without the runaround.

EVENT PLANNER

Bryan Rafanelli of Rafanelli Events Management

142 Berkeley St., Boston; 617-357-1818;
www.rafanellievents.com

Rafanelli's soup-to-nuts party planning includes concept development, invitations, lighting, design, flowers, food, drink, entertainment and party favors. Clients who have taken advantage of those services include the Institute of Contemporary Art, the Boston Ballet, Friends of the Public Garden, Mass. General Hospital, Children's Hospital, the Peabody Essex Museum, the Boston Public Library, Chanel and even the New York–based Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center. So it's no exaggeration to say that the planner is responsible for all the splashiest charity galas on Boston's social circuit. In addition to epic soirees, Rafanelli and his crew are equally adept at throwing an intimate dinner party for 20 or the fairytale wedding of every girl's dreams. Their genius lies in attention to detail and approaching the logistics involved in throwing an event with almost military precision. No wonder the most memorable parties in Boston invariably begin with Bryan Rafanelli.

FURNITURE, BASIC

Boston Interiors

Many locations throughout Massachusetts;
www.bostoninteriors.com

Short of inheriting it, there's no inexpensive or easy way to acquire all the furniture you need to turn your house into a home, but this chain, which has five stores throughout the state, goes a long way toward easing the process. Offering competitive prices for high-quality furniture, Boston Interiors carries a wide range of styles, from contemporary to classic, country casual to city sophisticate, and everything in between. Whether you're replacing the sofa in your den or completely redecorating, the expert staff can make helpful suggestions and ease that giant leap from showroom to your room. No high-profile TV campaign and no virtual-reality rides; just well-made furniture at affordable prices.

CREATIVE HOME FURNISHINGS

Koo de Kir

65 Chestnut St., Boston; 617-723-8111;
www.koodekir.com

Looking for that offbeat piece to accent your living room decor? Desperate to find an unusual gift for your friend the interior decorator? Need a one-of-a-kind house gift for your future mother-in-law? Head to Koo de Kir's new location on Chestnut Street, where this charming home-goods store carries everything from vases and tchotchkes to major furniture pieces, none of it generic or commonplace. Owner Kristine Irving, who's regularly featured in both In Style and Lucky magazines, is the sought-after designer responsible for such bold and original interiors as the trendy Chinese restaurant Peking Tom's. Her store offers complimentary home design services with some minimum purchase requirements; Irving or her staff will be happy to suggest ways to apply their rare finds to your personal space. The antithesis of Crate and Barrel, Koo de Kir carries reasonably priced, high-style design items to enrich and enliven the home.

☆BOSTON'S best '03☆

FURNITURE, HIGH-STYLE

Montage

75 Arlington St., Boston; 617-451-9400;
www.montagefurniture.com

Until this venerable, 40-year-old business opened its impressive Back Bay showroom last year, it had been located for 20 years at the Design Center. At that location it was a well-kept secret among interior decorators who probably told some fee-inflating tall tales to clients wondering where they'd found such unique and exquisite pieces. Now the cat's out of the bag, and this store specializing in fine furnishings from the best American and European designers has become a de rigueur stop for stylish urbanites refurbishing their homes. The overall look is sleek and contemporary, but the shop carries items that nicely compliment more traditional decor.

GIFT BOUTIQUE

Flat of the Hill

60 Charles St., Boston; 617-619-9977

It's nearly impossible to amble down Charles Street without noticing (and perhaps even wandering into) this little shop of delights. Whether you're on a quest for the perfect birthday present for that person who has everything, or you're just ambling and shopping, you're guaranteed to find exactly the right thing. Unique and funky jewelry, chic but whimsical handbags, and a variety of enticing bath and body products are only the beginning. Because of its popularity among Beacon Hill shoppers, things fly off the shelves, and compulsive shoppers, beware: The continually changing merchandise guarantees you'll spot something new on every visit. We defy you to leave this store without buying something.

GOLF STORE

Wayland Golf

890 Commonwealth Ave., Boston; 617-277-3999;
www.waylandgolf.com

As anyone who plays the game will tell you, golf is a religion. The matter of equipment is therefore a sacred one, and it's treated as such at this full-service store, which began as the pro shop at the Wayland Country Club (a public golf course, despite the highfalutin' name) and has since opened several locations throughout the state. Wayland Golf has it all—the latest putter designs, club covers and clothing, lessons by teaching pros, and all those nifty little things you keep in your bag to help you play (and pray) for 18 holes. If your pitching wedge is old and tired, their Used Club Buyback program will take it as a trade-in for store credit. Whether you're the club champ or a duffer out for your annual day on the links, Wayland Golf can provide you with everything short of Tiger Woods' mojo.

HOME BOUTIQUE

Bliss

121 Newbury St., Boston; 617-421-5544;
www.blisshome.com

Flash back to several years ago, when Panamai Manadee was planning her wedding and couldn't find a single store whose gift registry seemed distinctive and appealing. Frustrated by the lack of imagination in the standard bridal registries, she opened the original Bliss in Cambridge, filling it chockablock with the kind of unique and distinctive items discerning couples dream about. Today, having relocated to cushy new digs on Newbury Street, she has expanded the store's focus to include accessories like handbags and pillows, personal care items and much more, but the colorful boutique still specializes in extraordinary merchandise for people who would lovingly carry Sienese crockery back from Italy rather than trying to find something similar in the States. For brides who don't want to become Stepford Wives, this is the place to shop.

MOVING COMPANY

Gentle Giant

29 Harding St., Somerville; 617-661-3333;
www.gentlegiant.com

What better recommendation could there be than the fact that they're the official moving company of the Boston Marathon, schlepping all the equipment, food and medical supplies needed along the race's 26-mile route? Recipient of the Better Business Bureau's 2002 and 2003 "Local Torch Award" for best company of its size, Gentle Giant has received our Boston's Best award numerous times in the past due to its outstanding customer service. Eighty percent of its clients are repeat customers or word-of-mouth referrals, and the company follows up all moves with a phone call to gauge customer satisfaction. It also offers a crew-member guarantee: A portion of your fee is refunded if you're dissatisfied with one of their movers. Capable of coaxing a grand piano up five flights of stairs to its new home, or sending everything you own clear across the country, they're the ultimate relocation pros and handle everything with care, whether it's marked fragile or not.

OFFBEAT HOME GOODS

Fresh Eggs

58 Clarendon St., Boston; 617-247-8150

This store's motto is "everything for your nest," and poultry products are about the only thing it doesn't carry. Major items include furniture like sofas for you living room, or a cherry and steel buffet for your dinin room. Then there are the knick-knacks, like hand blown glass lamps, tablecloths, imported linens, sheet dishes and ceramics. Interspersed among it all is whimsical array of goods ranging from Phillipe Starc toothbrushes to funky earrings. The smaller items, lik

FLORIST

Box Exquisite Floral Design

53 Charles St., Boston; 617-742-4844

There's more to flower arrangement than simply stuffing some roses into a vase, and while Boston thankfully suffers from no shortage of talented florists, this Beacon Hill business is in a category all its own. Whether creating a simple bouquet to deliver to a sweetheart or a magnificent display to grace an elegant wedding, Box Exquisite's work is imaginative and interesting, and its designers add an original twist to every piece. A testament to the shop's excellence is its strong relationships with clients. One prominent woman we know wouldn't dream of throwing a party without the customized services of Box to match with the linens, lighting and surroundings. The shop also carries clout with wholesalers who consistently provide it with the freshest and most flawless blooms, from the everyday to the exotic. Small wonder that the best hotels call Box to create bouquets for visiting VIPs, dignitaries and celebrities.

POSTMODERN YENTA

Speed Dating Craze

www.8minutedating.com www.HurryDate.com www.jjproductions.net
www.accelodate.com

Everything in modern life happens at warp speed, so why should the search for true love be any different? The speed-dating phenomenon has spawned numerous services, but all of them offer essentially the same thing: an opportunity to meet multiple potential partners in an evening. With 8-Minute Dating, for example, which holds events at bars and restaurants all over town and tailors them to specific age groups or areas of interest (Christians, baseball fans, etc.), $28.88 buys you eight dates that last eight minutes each, with your next event free if you don't meet anyone you like. Despite the whiff of desperation and the inherent sense of impatience, proponents say it's better than online dating, since you meet the person face-to-face in a safe and neutral environment and your contact information is released only with your permission. Another obvious advantage is that there's not just safety but better odds in numbers. In any case, speed-dating has become amazingly popular, with variations on the same basic theme like Cosmo parties in New York (where nothing but Cosmopolitans are served) and, in Australia, "Blink Dating"—all of which makes us pine for the days when "speed-dating" was nothing but a euphemism for "one-night stand."

QUIRKY GIFTS

Black Ink

101 Charles St., Boston; 617-723-3883
5 Brattle St., Cambridge; 617-497-1221
370 Broadway, Cambridge; 617-576-3322

The term whimsical doesn't begin to describe this charmingly oddball purveyor of pop cultural arcana and what it calls "unexpected necessities." Housewares that emphasize the fun in functional, like a Bob's Big Boy coin bank or Rhodia notebooks (a fetish among some journal-keepers) share shelf space with things that will have you waxing nostalgic for your childhood or wishing you led the kind of life that requires a lunchbox. The selection of toys is worth throwing a temper tantrum over, and an array of inexpensive but inventive items makes it a breeze to buy gifts for those hard-to-shop-for friends and relatives. Unlike most novelty merchandise you'll find in stores, Black Ink's doesn't seem cheap or mass-produced, and most things serve some purpose other than simply putting a smile on your face (though they will do that as well).

RECORD STORE, LOCAL

Newbury Comics

332 Newbury St., Boston; 617-236-4930;
other locations in and around Boston;
www.newbury.com

The new album by Radiohead is coming out. Or Jay-Z or Beyoncé—it doesn't matter. The only thing you need to know is: You will find it cheapest at Newbury Comics. How do they keep their prices so low? It's the sheer numbers of units they move in Manic Panic hair dyes, Ozzy Osbourne (and family) action figures and little Goth lunchboxes that allow the stores to keep the prices down on their superb selection of music—from pop to hip-hop to punk to jazz to rock and everything in between. Boston audiophiles have been blessed with Newbury Comics' incredible selection of new and used music and video for 25 years, so drop by and wish them a "wicked good" birthday.

RECORD STORE, NATIONAL

Virgin Megastore

360 Newbury St., Boston; 617-896-0950
www.virginmega.com

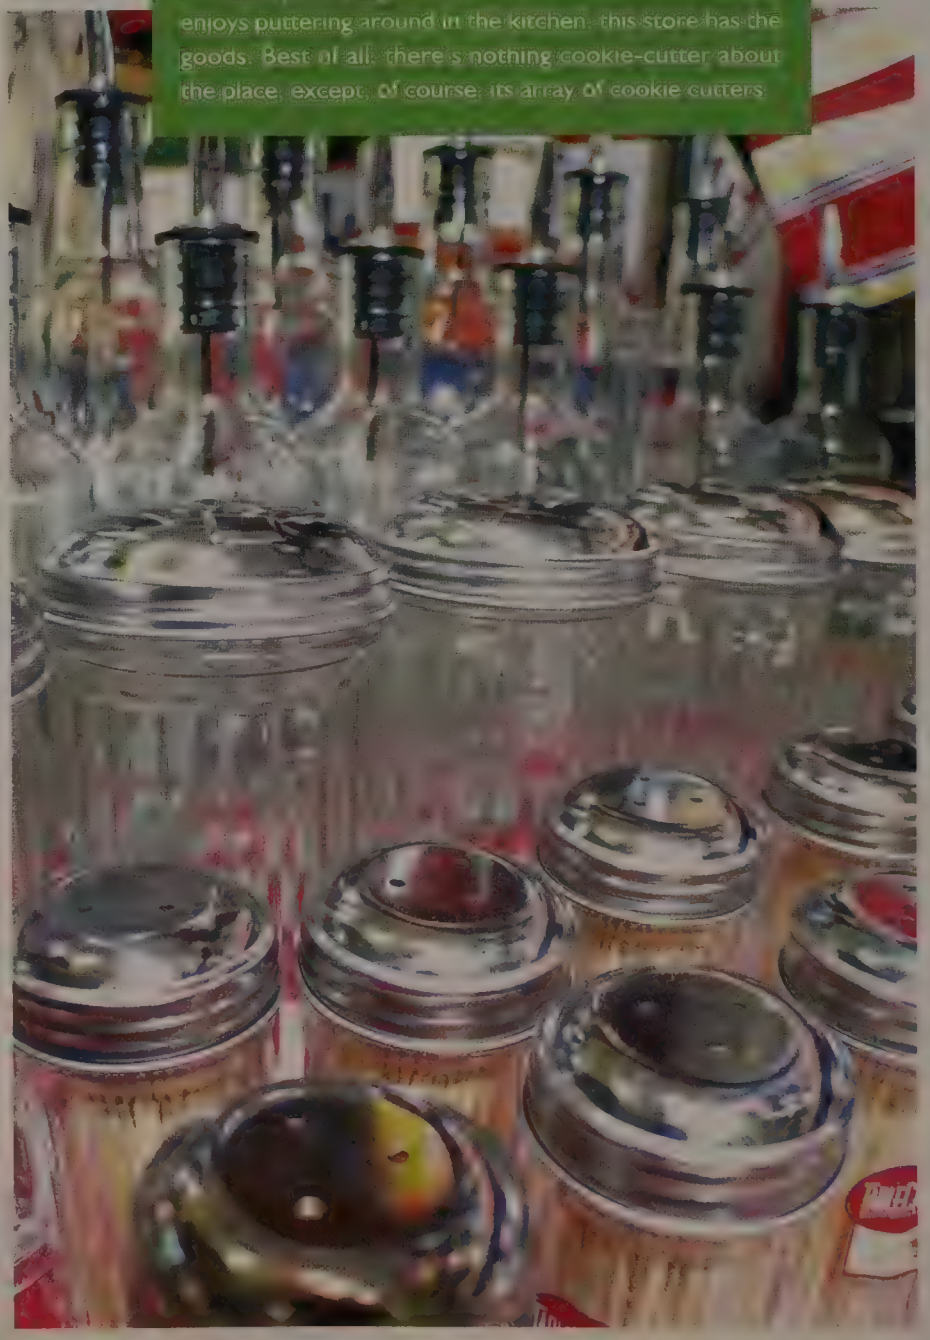
The corner of Newbury Street and Mass. Ave. has seen its share of record stores, but none have compared with its current occupant—the 40,000-square-foot Virgin store, a foothold in billionaire balloonist Richard Branson's empire. Virgin upped the ante for the other local chain music stores by covering ground they weren't, offering a vast selection of classical music and lots of new vinyl. There always seems to be some kind of tempting sale, and with Virgin's myriad of services—the café-bakery, the magical machines that let you hear any track on any CD and the frequent live DJs—customers might even miss the huge selection of CDs, DVDs, books, magazines and video games. Ah, who're we kidding? They'll see 'em.

COOKING STORE

Kitchen Arts

161 Newbury St., Boston; 617-266-8701

This tiny shop is crammed with everything you'll ever need for preparing and presenting food. Pots and pans hang from nearly every square inch of the ceiling, while the selection of tea kettles is almost comical in its variety of shapes, sizes and colors. Behind the counter, you'll find knives and pot holders. The shelves are stacked with nifty gizmos like waffle irons, espresso machines, serving utensils, sushi molds, cruets and chopsticks. Whether you're a gourmet chef or someone who simply enjoys puttering around in the kitchen, this store has the goods. Best of all, there's nothing cookie-cutter about the place, except, of course, its array of cookie cutters.



SPORTING GOODS

City Sports

Many locations around Boston;
www.citysports.com

Nobody wants to spend a fortune on sports equipment, but let's face it: If you don't have the right gear, you look like a dork. The answer to this conundrum is City Sports, which carries a wide selection of top-brand equipment at chain-store prices. Virtually any activity that involves a ball or raising your heart rate can be outfitted here, although the stores are especially strong in the clothing department. The well-trained staff are all athletes themselves, so they know a thing or two about the gear they're selling. The ubiquitous City Sports T-shirt, which you see someone wearing every 10 feet or so in Boston, is proof of the store's popularity.

TATTOO PARLOR

House of Pain

412 Ferry St., Everett; 617-394-0660;
www.houseofpaineverett.net

Thinking about getting some ink done? Then find your way over to this tucked-away tattoo parlor in Everett. It started out five years ago doing piercings (and has done upwards of 50,000 so far) and expanded into "body art" when tattooing became legal in Massachusetts. It has since developed a reputation for superior artistry and outstanding customer satisfaction. Because love is fleeting but a tattoo is forever, you can't get your girlfriend's name put on your bicep here, nor will the staff do anything it considers distasteful. In fact, they'd rather do nothing at all than saddle someone with a permanent marker that isn't appropriate. The level of hygiene is impeccable, and despite the shop's name, the staff does everything in its power to make the process less painful and intimidating.

VIDEO STORE

Mike's Movies

630 Tremont St., Boston; 617-266-9222;
250 Cambridge St., Boston; 617-742-7771;
www.mikesmoviesboston.com

If you're like us, when you're looking to rent a movie, you aren't interested in what some conglomerate in Hollywood has selected as this season's entertainment. That's why, once again, we've given top honors to this two-store video chain where the selection goes far beyond the lowest common denominator. Yes, the block-busters and new releases are here, including new releases of smaller, more obscure films that the big chains can't be bothered with. What's more, the stores actually carry a selection (as opposed to a few major titles) of independent, foreign and special-interest films, classics and documentaries (and their vast array of porn beggars the imagination). All rentals, with the exception of new releases, are for five days, which means you won't be racking up those sneaky late charges when real life gets in the way of watching videos. Best of all, Mike's has a snack selection that matches that of most cinemas, and both stores are manned by the kind of movie freak who can list every Fassbinder film in order or quote at length from Monsters, Inc. ➙

Your home is a reflection of your own unique sense of style. Each piece of furniture, every fabric, drapery or pattern is a statement of your individuality. That's why interior designer William Hulsman created Bill Hulsman Ready-to-Wear Home Fashions. He's filled his showroom with beautifully designed furniture, lighting, rugs, bedding and home accessories just waiting for you to make your own. Choose from the nearly limitless supply of fabrics to custom upholster that sofa or chair, or to create that drapery or pillow. Reasonably priced and available in 30 days, they're created for you and can't be found anywhere else. So, let Bill assist you in creating your own unique environment. After all, there's only one you.

BEAUTY BOUTIQUE

Beauty and Main

30 Brattle St., Cambridge; 617-868-7171;
66 South St., Hingham; 781-741-8501;
www.beautyandmain.com

With the endless options available in the wild world of beauty products, it can be difficult to see the forest for the trees. The savvy owners of Beauty and Main have done the research for you, selecting and stocking only the best cosmetic and skin care lines from around the world in their two stores. Here you'll find such gems as Trish McEvoy brushes, hair care products from Terax, makeup by Creed, NARS, Darphin and Laura Mercier—pretty much everything to make you look great, short of cosmetic surgery. Of course, it's tempting to spend a fortune, since every shelf has that one little something you just can't live without. After all, beauty may only be skin deep, but good beauty products are truly priceless. Look for a third location in Hingham's Derby Street Shoppes this fall.

BIKINI WAX

Austen for Austen's

115 Newbury St., Boston; 617-266-4017;
www.austensthestudio.com

No grooming ritual is as fraught with anxiety as the bikini wax, also known as the Brazilian Beauty Torture or the Dreaded Kitty Rip. When done poorly, it hurts like the devil and leaves unsightly bumps and irritated skin. When done well, however, it's a vast improvement on Mother Nature. Austen has the bikini wax down to a science. Discomfort is minimal and redness rare, while his professionalism makes being in a vulnerable and somewhat compromised position less distasteful. In fact, the highest praise we can offer is the assurance that you won't mind going back every five weeks, which is about as long as the waxing lasts.

BIO IONIC HAIR STRAIGHTENING

Lord's and Lady's

450 Belgrade Ave., West Roxbury; 617-323-4700

The demand for the permanent hair-straightening system known as bio ionic has forced nearly every salon to learn the Japanese technique. However, this suburban coiffeur is head-and-shoulders above the rest. Part of a 23-store chain that's been doing business throughout New England for more than 30 years, it has always been known for its technical excellence. The shop began to do bio ionic straightening four years ago (long before competitors started offering it) and has since pleased more than 2,000 clients. The salon has several stylists devoted solely to the bio ionic technique, and the process, which takes three to five hours to complete, costs between $500 and $700 (depending on the length, condition and thickness of your hair). Just think: You'll never have to use a straightening iron again.

COSMETIC DENTIST

Dr. Steven D. Spitz at Smileboston

665 Beacon St., Boston; 617-437-1060;
www.smileboston.net

There's more to cosmetic dentistry than simply spiffing up your choppers with some whitening agent. At Smileboston, headed up by Dr. Steven Spitz, they start from the foundation, making sure your gums are in perfect shape before working on any other part of your mouth or teeth. The gifted Dr. Spitz can realign your teeth using various techniques, and fill in gaps using crowns or veneers. He also offers the popular (and long-lasting) Britesmile whitening procedure to make your smile as dazzling as a Pepsodent commercial. Smileboston's motto—"Confidence begins with a great smile"—is an understatement. You won't be able to stop grinning when you see yourself.

BEAUTY SALON, OVERALL

Salon Mario Russo

9 Newbury St., Boston; 617-424-6676;
234 Berkeley St., Boston; 617-266-4485;
www.mariorusso.com

There's a reason you read about Mario Russo, his salon, his line of products and his top-rated stylists in the pages of fashion magazines. His skills have been touted in publications like Elle and Allure, and when celebrities come to town and need freshening up, they see Russo. And because the man himself trains every member of the staff, each of whom spends a minimum of one and a half years assisting him and learning the art of keeping abreast of current trends, they're all masters at making you look like a million bucks.

COSMETICS DEPARTMENT

Filene's

426 Washington St., Boston; 617-357-2100; www.filenes.com

The cosmetics department at Filene's is always buzzing with something new. You might find makeup artists from MAC applying the latest trendy colors to customers, or a Clarins rep offering to brush on some powder on your way out the door. The recent addition of a state-of-the-art Stila bay has brought Filene's to another level in the high-end beauty market. The staff is helpful without being pushy and welcomes visitors who are simply there to play. The gifts with purchases are an added perk, and the fun events are actually worth attending.

CREATIVE STYLING

Patrick McGinley, Vidal Sassoon

14 Newbury St., Boston; 617-536-5496

If the name Patrick McGinley sounds familiar, perhaps it's because the Alabama native garnered last year's award for Best Women's Haircut. Well, he's back again, this year for his impeccable styling skills. His name has become synonymous with sexy, innovative, up-to-the-minute styling. Whether you're looking for a head-turning updo for a black-tie affair, or you simply want to put the sparkle back in your significant other's eye, McGinley's the man for the job. He'll turn your mane into a work of art.

DAY SPA

Giuliano Spa for Beauty and Wellness

338 Newbury St., Boston; 617-262-2220;
www.giulianodayspa.com

Giuliano Day Spa has become so well-known among Bostonians who know how to pamper themselves that they had to install an automated service to handle the volume of phone calls. Everything else, however, is done with a personal touch, and what a soothing touch it is. Unique services include the Rasul Treatment, in which the client sits in a steam chamber while mineral-rich muds soak up impurities from the skin; a simulated rain storm then washes the impurities away. The soft-pack treatment, meanwhile, is one of the spa's most sough

GIRLS' NIGHT IN

Powder Hour at the Beauty Mark

92B Pinckney St., Boston; 617-720-1555

Like a pajama party in a sorority house, this Beacon Hill shop hosts an evening of beauty for successful professional women every Thursday night. Spend an hour or two with your girlfriends, learning how to enhance your gorgeousness by deftly applying makeup while sipping wine, gossiping and giggling. The expert staff will do mini makeovers or offer tips for minor improvements without giving you the hard sell. The fun-and-then-some service is free with a minimum purchase of $15, and you'll be out the door by 8 pm—in plenty of time to meet a date for dinner or drinks so you can try out your new look.

er packages—after being massaged with a choice of s or treatments, the client is wrapped first in a warm th, then in a waterproof blanket and, finally, is subrged from neck to feet in warm water that helps the n absorb the treatment. DOWN-AND-DIRTY WORKOUT

Boston Athletic Club

653 Summer St., Boston; 617-269-4300;
www.bostonathleticclub.com

ıe Boston Athletic Club has everything a fitness cen- needs without all the fluff. Workout options range m cardio to resistance training, with or without the tivating force of BAC's personal trainers or group ness classes. An intensely no-nonsense attitude per- ates the place, which makes feeling the burn as ex- arating as it is exhausting. Founded as a tennis club the 1970s, it hasn't lost sight of its humble beginıgs and still offers basketball, tennis, racquetball, ıash and handball courts. While your competitive e flourishes, there are plenty of ways to nourish the dy with a little TLC: Nutritional counseling, physical therapy, sports chiropractic services, massage and salon services round out the picture. BAC gets bonus points for being kid-friendly: It offers babysitting, junior tennis and swimming lessons, and after-school, vacation and summer programs.

ETHNIC HAIR SALON

Olive's Salon and Day Spa

1198 Boylston St., Chestnut Hill; 617-734-3944;
www.olivestextures.com

While most upscale salons concentrate on the tonsorial traits of Caucasians, this elegant salon in Chestnut Hill specializes in treating all hair textures and is known for its excellence in chemical relaxing. All the employees are well-schooled in the follicular differences between ethnic groups, and they provide flawless service to everyone who enters. Best known for styling the city's most stylish women of color (including Amy Johnson of Channel 7), Olive's deserves major kudos for making Boston a more beautiful place.

EYEBROW SHAPING

Renée Christopher for Maksou Salon and Day Spa

125 Broad St., Boston; 617-443-8633; www.maksou.com

Nothing can change your face more drastically than the shape of your brows, but having the wrong person perform the task can result in disaster. Renée Christopher at Maksou is quick and efficient without causing even the tiniest twinge of pain. She prefers just slightly shaped brows that are uniform throughout and have a delicate arch in the middle. She's more than happy to give you the brows of your choice, of course, but her advice and expertise are always worth following. Let her do that voodoo that she does so well, and Christopher will give you brows that bless your face.

FACIAL

Splash at the Sports Club/LA

4 Avery St., Boston; 617-375-8580;
www.thesportsclubla.com

Members of this world-class gym swear by the spa and its services, which are also known among the cognoscenti who don't have a membership. The level of luxury is unparalleled in the city, and a full range of beauty and relaxation treatments are administered by the best in the profession. Facials, offered in many varieties, are a major standout, and the Splash Signature Facial is a must at least once per season. After 50 minutes of cleansing, exfoliating, extractions, masking and moisturizing, your skin will glow like it's never done before, and that radiance will last for weeks. It's as effective as a sip from the fountain of youth.

GLAM WORKOUT

The Sports Club/LA

4 Avery St., Boston; 617-375-8200;
www.thesportsclubla.com

Looking for a little West Coast pampering in your workout? Look no further than the Sports Club/LA, the ultimate in luxurious fitness facilities, where the odious task of attaining physical perfection is actually made pleasant. All the latest and greatest equipment is here in a sleek, state-of-the-art gym that boasts magnificent views of the city. In 100,000 square feet of floor space you'll find it all: aerobics and pilates, cardio and resistance training, swimming, boxing, basketball, squash and more. The personal trainers are people you'd want to socialize with, and the group class offerings are as varied as those at any gym we've seen—fencing, scuba certification and yoga being only a few of the options. A full-service salon and day spa, along with one of the city's best restaurants, Blu, make it the urban equivalent of a country club. And with a clientele that includes the city's biggest movers and shakers as well as guests at the Ritz-Carlton, it's as upscale as a gym can get. In fact, it's the only gym we've ever been to where we could honestly say that we didn't want to leave.

HAIR COLORIST

Seth Selman for James Joseph Salon

30 Newbury St., Boston; 617-266-7222;
www.jamesjosephsalon.com

Whether you're looking for funky color that makes a statement or the subtlest highlights, Seth from James Joseph Salon is your man. If natural's your aim, he can give you sun-kissed tresses that'll have people thinking you just got back from St. Barts. For those with a wilder side, his ability to blend unexpected colors in surprising combos results in an artful display on your head. Rather than a punk-rock freak show, he somehow manages to make it look sexy and cool. This Falmouth native has a bubbly personality and will entertain you throughout the process. An hour or so in his chair will color your world.

WOMEN'S HAIRCUT

Charles Maksou for Maksou Salon and Day Spa

125 Broad St., Boston; 617-443-8633; www.maksou.com

Charles Maksou is the man responsible for bringing John Sahag's celebrated dry-cut method to Boston. His approach takes into account the shape of the head and the direction that the hair grows. After assessing your head, he moves your hair to see how it naturally falls. After he cuts your hair, you'll find that you can simply shampoo and condition it and let it air-dry with consistently flawless results. You can also straighten your hair for Maksou's sleek, signature look. Women who go to him once are instantly addicted to the quality of his cuts, and his vivacious charm adds to his appeal.

HAIR EXTENSIONS

Dwayne Hicks for Danny's His and Hers

189 Mass. Ave., Boston; 617-266-6022

These days, hair extensions are as commonplace as facelifts and breast implants, and it's become an everyday occurrence to see someone who has shoulder-length hair one day sporting waist-length locks the next. Unfortunately, it's difficult to find someone who can do the job well at a reasonable price, so many times hair extensions look as fake as a $10 wig. Hicks at Danny's His and Hers is already wrestling with an overbooked schedule, but we're sure he can handle a couple more. His method involves sewing each row of new hair (all natural and all human) into your own by using very thin braids, which keeps the rows from looking bulky. The result is a more natural appearance and feel, and one visit will last around two months. Proof of the old saying: "Hair today, long tomorrow."

MAKEUP ARTIST

Ingrid Cordeiro for Team, the Agency

423 West Broadway, Fourth floor, South Boston; 617-268-3600; www.teamtheagency.com

Most makeup artists are armed with brushes. Cordeiro has chosen to go another route, using an airbrush machine to apply makeup. The result is the most delicately applied, even coverage, which makes for a flawless complexion. Cordeiro is equally adept at achieving a natural, everyday look or dramatic makeup for weddings or fashion shoots. You'd never guess that looking your best could mean looking this good.

MANICURE

Donna Charloff for Beaucage

71 Newbury St., Boston; 617-437-7171; www.beaucage.com

Like Elle Woods in Legally Blonde, Charloff knows the importance of flawless nails and the value of a good polish change. In fact, her laid-back demeanor and gentle ministrations can make the lousiest day seem manageable. After artfully snipping each cuticle, she'll buff and paint each nail to perfection. She's also an expert at choosing the right color to go with any outfit. Tailoring her services to suit the personality and style of each client, she's built a fan base that extends well beyond Boston. If she ever left, we're not sure the suicide hotline could handle all the calls.

MASSAGE

The staff at Etant

524 Tremont St., Boston; 617-423-5040; www.etant.com

Short of developing an addiction to prescription drugs, there's no more reliable way to remain stress-free than with a regular visit to this South End House of Soothing. There's no need to schedule an appointment with a specific therapist because every member of the staff is outstanding, whether you need knots worked out with a deep-tissue sports massage or merely a relaxing rubdown (the Swedish massage). The surroundings are pleasant and the services superb, with a minimum of the New Age mumbo jumbo that makes so many other massage places unbearable. In short, they've got just the right touch.

MEN'S HAIRCUT

Jessica Puglia for Mitchell John Salon

67 Broad St., Boston; 617-951-0122

Whether you want a whole new you or a cut that's completely low-maintenance, you can't go wrong with Jessica Puglia. This skilled professional invests the necessary time to ensure an impeccable cut and never lets her clients walk out the door with a style they can't maintain at home. Because most men prefer a natural look, she doesn't use a lot of sticky products unless requested. Guys with unruly hair, meanwhile, will be styled into submission. And men need not worry about encountering a flighty hair salon attitude. She's as down-to-earth and welcoming as they come.

MIRACLE WORKER

Dean Boudreau for Beaucage

71 Newbury St., Boston; 617-437-7171; www.beaucage.com

When bad color happens to good people, Boudreau is the only person in the city who can fix the damage. No matter the disaster, he's got the solution, from toning down badly done dye jobs, to neutralizing chlorine green, to repairing mishaps from supermarket coloring kits. He'll accommodate clients at a moment's notice—if he's booked, he can assess the damage, choose a color and let another stylist take over. Expertly jumping between clients, doing patch tests and identifying how to fix the problem, he's a one-man mission of mercy and best friend to those suffering from hair anxiety.

PEDICURE

My Nail Salon

669 Tremont St., Boston; 617-424-6261

When your paws need prettifying, this gem hidden away in the South End is aces. Guess where all those high-priced manicurists on Newbury Street go to get their nails done? At the hands of the courteous and efficient staff here, you'll leave looking like you spent a lot more than you did on your digits. One of the city's best-kept beauty secrets, it deserves props for being speedy without making your pedicure look like a rush job.

SALON INTERIOR

James Joseph Salon

30 Newbury St., Second floor, Boston; 617-266-7222; www.jamesjosephsalon.com

Having your hair done is as much about the experience as the end result, and both are flawless at this gorgeous salon on the first block of Newbury Street. Owner William George worked with white-hot design firm Office dA to create an interior that's minimalist without being stark, luxurious without being ostentatious, and contemporary without being sci-fi. The space has high ceilings, and dark wood is accented with panels of sheer fabric. The stations are sumptuously comfortable and highly functional, and the sink area is equipped with designer massage chairs. There's even an impressive deck out back, where the most stylish outdoor furniture we've ever seen offers clients a pleasant space to lounge around and enjoy some fresh air while waiting for an appointment or processing. If there are hair salons in heaven, they probably look something like this.

TANNING SALON

Tanning Etc.

485 Comm. Ave., Boston; 617-267-7744

There are any number of ways to achieve the sun-kissed bronze of a deep, dark tan, and this place offers all of them. For those who crave a direct dose of UV, UVA and UVB rays, there are tanning beds, which are clean and well-maintained. It also has a high-intensity tanning system called Ultra Sun Turbo that offers a savage tan in 2 minutes. For those who are wary of radiation in any form it offers the Mystic Tan: a booth that sprays you from head to toe with a fine mist of self-tanner that gives you a healthy glow, safely, in just 60 seconds. In the time it takes to read this, you can look like you just got back from a week at the beach.

WELCOME ADDITION

G Spa

35 Newbury St., Boston; 617-267-4772

G Spa is a welcome offshoot of the wildly successful suburban businesses (Grettacole salons in Wellesley, Chestnut Hill and Copley, and GrettaLuxe clothing boutique in Wellesley) founded by fashion and beauty guru Gretchen Monahan. Exactly what Boston has been missing, G Spa offers quickie services in a convenient location. Facials, manicures, pedicures, hair services, massage and body treatments are all available on short notice. Facials are performed in the deluxe spa upstairs, or at the beauty bar, where clients sip while sipping specialty drinks. A lightning-fast manicure or pedicure can be done in as little as 20 minutes, although if you have the time, you can get the works. The decor is sumptuous yet simple, warm and welcoming, with stylish little touches like stainless-steel pedicure basins. Whether you're a harried, high-powered exec or a leisurely lady who lunches, it's an oasis of world-class pampering in the heart of the Back Bay. ⊶

Double Take

Two brothers taking style to the next level

"A hair style can be a fabulous, fun expression of your beauty" — Richard Fontana.

Richard Fontana and Scott Fontana bring their West Coast and New York hair sensibilities to Boston with a fresh, personal approach to hair fashion. The brothers are committed to providing the utmost in personal attention and pampering to both men and women.

At Salon Fontana all clients experience a one-on-one consultation with either Richard or Scott to determine a cut, color and style that best compliments their hair type, facial features, skin tone, lifestyle and personality.

"A perfect hair cut is one that suits you as an individual and expresses your personality" — Scott Fontana.

Unique to Salon Fontana is the range of training and experience the two brothers offer. Richard and Scott each own and manage a salon in Las Vegas, Nevada and Newport Beach, California respectively. "Splitting time between our salons gives us the chance to share new styles and techniques from across the country with clients. Hair is a fashion necessity, a look you wear everyday." says Scott.

BARGAIN HUNTING

Filene's Basement

426 Washington St., Boston; 617-542-2011;
www.filenesbasement.com

It's funny to think that in far-flung places like Uttar Pradesh and the Trobriand Islands, people are talking about the deals they found at Filene's Basement, but it's probably true. Everyone who visits Boston and discovers the granddaddy of discount stores tells their friends back home, and "the Basement," as it's affectionately known, is consequently world famous. Unlike its chain locations, the original store still has piles of clothing unceremoniously heaped in bins or hung on racks, as well as that ineffable I'll-fight-you-to-the-death-for-that-sweater atmosphere. Famous designer labels are a major draw, as are legendary sales like the annual bridal gown event, where otherwise civilized women are known to change in the aisles and come to blows over a dress. You never know what you'll find at the Basement. One day it could be a pair of Keds and the next a Valentino ball gown.

BOUTIQUE MEGASTORE

Jasmine Sola

344 Newbury St., Boston; 617-867-4636;
37 A Brattle St., Cambridge; 617-354-6043;
199 Boylston St., Chestnut Hill; 617-332-8415;
www.jasminesola.com

Jasmine Sola was started decades ago by Luciano Manganella, and when he expanded to Newbury Street some years back, the shop became a bona fide boutique-cum-department store. Among the fashions you'll find on the racks: names like BCBG, Juicy Couture and Manganella's own design line, Jasmine. The shoe selection is epic, and the clothing includes the latest in hipster attire, including low-slung jeans, cute little tops and flirty dresses. Cutting-edge accessories and campy gifts round out the picture. Not surprisingly, Jasmine Sola is doing so well that it has recently opened stores in Connecticut and Rhode Island.

CLUB WEAR

Industria Boutique

222 Newbury St., Boston; 617-859-3635

For anyone who's ever suffered the severe mortification of walking into a party or a club wearing the same outfit as somebody else, this boutique is a godsend. Funky and casual, it carries clothing for both sexes and caters to a range of tastes and budgets. The selection of trendy play clothes will flatter most body types (the svelte will do better here, due to what they call a more fitted "European" cut), including jeans, shirts, halter tops, dresses, slacks and so on, all by designers like Couture and Planet. The prices make it less painful to pay for something you know you'll wear only a few times before it goes out of style, and best of all, the chances of anyone you know owning the same item are close to nil. Rather than dressing like a Gucci clone, you're better off scouring the racks at this offbeat shop. Lest it get overrun by tragically hip fashion victims, let's keep it our little secret, shall we?

COSTUME JEWELRY

High Gear

139 Richmond St., Boston; 617-523-5804

You may not have noticed a small costume jewelry shop tucked away on a side street in the North End. But for anyone who's wandered in, it has undoubtedly become a secret treasure trove. High Gear carries cutting-edge, high-fashion jewelry inspired by top designers at remarkably reasonable prices—everything from sterling silver to rhinestone pieces in a variety of sizes and styles. The shop is like an explosion of dazzling colors and shapes, and you might not come out from under its spell until your vision begins to blur and you walk out the door weighed down by a bag full of goodies.

FASHION SECRET

Lord & Taylor

760 Boylston St., Boston; 617-262-6000;
and various other locations in Massachusetts;
www.lordandtaylor.com

One of Fifth Avenue's most venerable retailers, Lord & Taylor has long been a fixture among upper-crust Bostonians, who rely on its no-nonsense approach to fashion to fit their no-nonsense lifestyles. Whether you need a gown for a formal gala or a flannel nightgown for a cold winter evening in front of the TV, Lord & Taylor has an array of affordably priced styles mixed in with its merchandise. The men's shop is a bastion of conservatism but has all the basics, and although the store's image can seem a bit stodgy, there are treasures to be found. The sales, especially, are fantastic. At the end of each season, you can find gorgeous designer duds marked down as much as 70 percent. And because the store caters to a more staid clientele, what's left is often some of the most interesting stuff. Proof that sometimes the best things come in unexpected packages.

FINE JEWELRY

Tiffany & Co.

100 Huntington Ave., Copley Place, Boston; 617-353-0222;
300 Boylston St., Chestnut Hill; 617-527-1881; www.tiffany.com

Nothing raises expectations quite like that little blue box, and perhaps no store is more synonymous with impeccable taste and refined elegance. Since the original store opened in New York City 166 years ago, Tiffany & Co. has outfitted the discerning elite with baubles and trinkets of unequaled quality and craftsmanship. With its respect for tradition combined with an uncanny ability to stay contemporary—for example, identifying the genius of such designers as Elsa Peretti and Paloma Picasso—it's not surprising that it has maintained its image of grace and glamour. Our only criticism is that the Boston locations don't serve breakfast.

HANDBAGS

Longchamp

139A Newbury St., Boston; 617-425-0740;
www.longchamp.com

The expression "like buttah" could have been coined to describe the exquisite handbags produced by this legendary French maker, which took its name from the famous racetrack near Paris. Using the finest leathers in the world, dyed in a magnificent array of colors and styled for both comfort and looks, Longchamp produces a line of truly flawless handbags, the most popular model being the Pliage. A nylon and leather sack that comes folded up in a small rectangle, it can be thrown into a purse or suitcase for travel. When it's unfolded, voilà! A gorgeous, full-size bag that you can use to tote home all your new purchases, which (if you're smart) will include something new from Longchamp.

INTIMATE APPAREL

La Perla

250 Boylston St., Boston; 617-423-5709; www.laperla.com

The Italians know that life holds no greater pleasure than the feeling of fine lingerie against the skin, or the look of a sexy little something on the woman you love. The undergarments at La Perla are a case in point. Paying a small fortune for an article of clothing no one but you and your S.O.

MEN'S SUITS

Aquascutum of London

450 Boylston St., Boston; 617-262-0066

We've all noticed the large blue awning on Boylston Street bearing the name Aquascutum. It looks somewhat intimidating and, let's face it, stuffy. Most men wouldn't dare to peek inside, for fear of finding a more uptight version of the store where their grandfather shopped. But for the adventurous few, a fashion jackpot is the reward for bravery. Inside, you'll find the most gorgeously constructed classically tailored British suits. Short of Saville Row, it doesn't get any better. Prices range from $695 to $1,195, but once the soft, tightly woven fabric touches your skin, you'll be more willing to give up your first born than your new threads. That dark awning is just a frame for a veritable gold mine of merchandise designed to make you look like James Bond.

will see (and briefly, at that) might seem slightly self-indulgent. So what makes these pieces worth every single penny? The quality and design. Using the finest Parisian lace, La Perla crafts its delicate little nothings in Italy, but the inspiration clearly comes from heaven. Here, you'll find a merry widow that will make you look like a devilish angel and feel like a queen, a corset that would induce heart palpitations in most heterosexual men, or a peignoir that'll have your husband panting. We're not sure, but La Perla might be Italian for "sometimes the wrapping makes the gift even better."

MEN'S DRESS SHIRTS

Thomas Pink

280 Washington St., Boston; 617-426-7859;
Copley Place., Boston; 617-267-0447; www.thomaspink.com

Known simply as "Pink" to partisans, this English shirtmaker is noted for its bold use of color and patterns. One of the few ways a man wearing a suit can make a fashion statement is with his choice of a shirt, and Pink's fairly scream, "I might have to look all corporate, but underneath, I'm a wild guy with a vivid imagination." They also say, "I'm successful," since there's nothing cheap about them. In fact, in London, a Pink shirt is de rigueur among investment bankers and other financial types. The styling, from French cuffs to spread collars, is classic and comfortable, the materials and workmanship superb, and the selection rivals F. Scott Fitzgerald's description of Gatsby's closet.

MEN'S HIGH-END CLOTHING

Paul Smith at Neiman-Marcus

5 Copley Place, Boston; 617-536-3660

Whimsical yet dignified is probably the best way to describe the clothing of English designer Paul Smith, who's built a quiet cult following among male fashion addicts. The appeal lies in the details: A jacket lining so beautiful you'd be tempted to wear it inside out. A subtle, beautifully made pinstriped suit that allows a glimpse of vibrant color when the wind blows. Shirt buttons in interesting, offbeat shapes. Smith is also the guy who thought of using things like old typewriter keys as cufflinks. Boston's best-dressed men are waiting with bated breath for him to open a free-standing boutique, but until then, the source is either New York or Neiman-Marcus.

TIES

Hermes of Paris

320 Boylston St., Boston; 617-482-8707; www.hermes.com

It's almost a cliche. Wearing a Hermes tie, like playing polo or graduating from a Swiss boarding school, immediately marks a man as belonging to the upper crust. This French luxury-goods store, which started out making tack and saddles for Europe's elite, has long been known for its playful neckties in cheerful but sophisticated colors and patterns. Yellow elephants against a pink background. Interconnected gold loops on a field of royal blue. They're all made in limited editions, which lessens the likelihood of someone else at the country club having the exact same tie. Best of all, unlike many other status symbols they'll never go out of style.

MEN'S MODERATE CLOTHING

DKNY

37 Newbury St., Boston; 617-236-0476; www.dkny.com

Simple, stylish men's clothing that isn't boring is hard to come by, but that's what you'll find on the third floor of the DKNY boutique. Although the store is better known for its women's line, the men's collection is equally strong. The pieces avoid passing trends and are easy to work into your existing wardrobe, while the prices are comparatively low. For guys who shy away from designer labels because they're not low-key enough, DKNY offers the solution, with classic, clean lines and a crisp silhouette. Most of the clothing is casual enough for a weekend day, but the shop also carries a respectable selection of pants and shirts that are appropriate for the office or a night out. Best of all, you won't look like you tried too hard.

MEN'S SHOES

Louis Boston

234 Berkeley St., Boston; 617-262-6100;
www.louisboston.com

Here's a secret: many men are just as bad as women are when it comes to being shoe whores. Instead of Jimmy Choo's and Manolo's, it's Silvano Lattanzi or Sutor Mantellassi, and Louis is where the well-shod man goes to shoe shop. In keeping with the store's status as a temple to fashion, it has shoes to fit every occasion and coordinate with any outfit, from black-tie to a weekend trip to the Cape. Obscure and hard-to-find designers, like Miu-Miu and Costume National, are the spécialité de la maison, but Louis has Prada and Todd's, too. They say you can't judge a man until you've walked a mile in his moccasins, but if his moccasins are from Louis, you at least know he has good taste.

OUTLET SHOPPING

Wrentham Village Premium Outlets

1 Premium Outlets Blvd., Wrentham; 508-384-0600;
www.premiumoutlets.com

Just 30 minutes south of the city (if you drive like a true Bostonian) lies a mini-city of outlet shops that, upon initial inspection, can be somewhat daunting. The choices are overwhelming, with an outdoor promenade that houses such mid- to high-end retailers as BCBG, Versace and Williams-Sonoma. This is where the merchandise that doesn't sell at the regular stores goes to be marked down, often obscenely. But unlike the Island of Misfit Toys in Rudolph the Red-Nosed Reindeer, most merchandise here is first-quality and undamaged. You can find just about everything you need, from home goods to candy to accessories to clothing, as well as things you don't really need but might as well buy because they're such a bargain. For shopaholics, it's slightly less dangerous than the neighborhood mall, and for the label-conscious but financially challenged, it's a godsend.

LILLY PULITZER SIGNATURE SI

TRENDY AFFORDABLE

H&M

350 Washington St., Boston; 617-482-7001; www.hm.com

The problem with fashion trends is that they're over quickly, and you're left holding the outdated goods with an outstanding balance on your credit card. Thankfully, this Swedish clothing store has started a fashion revolution, offering up-to-the-minute styles at prices that won't make you wince. It carries men's, women's and children's clothing, so you can have the whole family looking au courant without breaking the bank. The Downtown Crossing location has become ground zero for the chic but thrifty. Combined with a trip to Filene's Basement, it's cut-rate couture that can't be beat.

PLUS-SIZE CLOTHING

Marina Rinaldi

296 Boylston St., Boston; 617-423-1221

Most fashion designers have decided that big-boned gals don't want to look sexy. In their opinion, any woman larger than a size 14 might as well just wear a muumuu. However, Marina Rinaldi is one of the few retailers that realizes many plus-sized women are comfortable with their bodies and don't mind showing them off in a tasteful but flirtatious way. The clothing bears a striking resemblance to Max Mara, Marina Rinaldi's parent company—the finest fabrics sewn into fetching items like a slip dress with geometric finishing or a low-cut shirt to accent a 1940s-style suit. Sizes range from 10 to 22, and you won't find any references to "big and tall" anywhere in the store.

THRIFT STORE

The Garment District

200 Broadway, Cambridge; 617-876-5230;
www.thegarmentdistrict.com

Located at the funkier end of Cambridge, near Kendall Square, this legendary thrift store has become a way of life for some. Devotees spend hours every week searching for that perfect vintage treasure. Because the stock is constantly refreshed, you never know what you'll find in this cavernous emporium. The Dollar-A-Pound room is our favorite, if only for its sheer gimmickry. The staff piles clothing and accessories into gigantic mounds that customers sift through. Once you've pillaged to the point of exhaustion, you throw your finds on a scale to determine how much you owe. Now you know where the computer geek in your office finds all those funky shirts.

WATCHES

Alpha Omega

1380 Mass. Ave., Cambridge; 617-864-1227;
www.alphaomegajewelers.com

Wristwatches are a mere afterthought at most jewelers. At Alpha Omega, they're the main event. Founded in 1978, the store is renowned for its extensive collection in a wide range of prices to suit any wallet. From Fossil and Gucci to Piaget and Rolex, there's a style to suit everyone. The original Alpha Omega store opened in Harvard Square in 1978. Since then, it has expanded to eight locations throughout the Boston area. The flagship store in Cambridge boasts over 6,000 square feet of watches and jewelry. A store dedicated to the proposition that everyone should enjoy answering the question "What time is it?"

WELCOME ADDITION

Christina Delfalco

383 Hanover St., Boston; 617-523-8870;
www.christinadelfalco.com

A rarity in Boston: a designer-owned and -operated boutique. The playful, colorful clothing designed by Delfalco includes cute little skirts, dresses, T-shirts, jewelry and handbags, all with a charmingly quirky, individualistic feel that offers a welcome respite from mass-market, mass-produced clothing. (The shop also carries a few jewelry items from other designers.) If you're sick of looking like a paper doll dressed in the same thing that everyone else is wearing, it's well worth a visit.

WOMEN'S HIGH-END CLOTHING

Giorgio Armani Boutique

22 Newbury St., Boston; 617-267-3200;
www.giorgioarmani.com

With a reputation for appealing mainly to an older clientele, Armani has come out with younger, hipper styles in its recent collections. The clean lines and exquisite fabrics have that flawlessly modern appeal, and a unique touch or two catapults each design into the realm of the truly special. Though the clothes are admittedly pricey (apparently, no one in Milan bats an eyelash at spending a week's salary for a little black dress), each piece is a classic you'll wear for years to come. Truly chic and truly timeless rarely go together, but at Armani, they're of a piece.

WOMEN'S MODERATE CLOTHING

DKNY

37 Newbury St., Boston; 617-236-0476; www.dkny.com

Each season, Donna Karan comes out with a collection that contains clothing any woman could wear, and by "any woman" we don't mean Heidi Klum or Giselle Bundchen. Every three months, the DKNY boutique offers a collection of elegant but wearable styles that stay abreast of the latest trends without going overboard. Perfectly priced for a young professional, it still has that designer cachet, and because the shop stocks only four or five of each piece, you know that you're safe from seeing your purchase on women all over the city. However, it also means that if you see something in Bazaar that you absolutely have to own, you'd better jump on it pronto because it won't be around for long.

WOMEN'S SHOES

Stuart Weitzman

Copley Place, Boston; 617-266-8699;
www.stuartweitzman.com

This boutique's window displays, redecorated each month with shoes made by a different artist, reflect the designer's belief that shoes are a work of art. While the shoes in the window aren't for sale (they're made of materials like papier mâché or glass or decorated with playing cards or other creative objects), the ones you'll find inside are equally inventive, glamorous and sexy, as well as both practical and affordable. The shop has everything from flats to stilettos, but its signature style is truly unique: beaded and rhinestone-studded heels that are dazzling but not overdone. Everyone who walks into the store is instantly mesmerized by the glitter of these hard-to-find gems. Once the awe has worn off, you'll find that all of Stuart Weitzman's designs make you look like you've spent your entire life shoe shopping and your entire net worth paying for them. ⊷

PLACE TO GET ENGAGED

Dali

415 Washington St., Somerville; 617-661-3254;
www.dalirestaurant.com

Mario Leon and Tamara Bourso opened the Spanish restaurant Dali 4 years ago. After eight years, Leon and Bourso were on their way to the altar. Perhaps that's another reason, in addition to the romantic setting, that people tend to pop the question at Dali. One of Boston's most popular restaurants for its delicious Spanish food, Dali is aglow with candles that illuminate a richly colored decor. The waitstaff is so used to people proposing there that they've become masters at co-conspiring to help things run smoothly. Once the question has been popped, waiters serenade the happy couple with a song, shower them with bubbles and place a veil on the head of the bride-to-be. With that kind of personal attention and a little of the addictive sangria, you can easily see why it's hard to say no to anything while dining in this incredible space.

BRIDESMAID GOWNS

Jessica McClintock

201 Newbury St., Boston;
617-247-6667;
www.jessicamcclintock.com

Many women know all too well the mortification of being encased in a hideous gown in a color no one would wear, and having their humiliation witnessed by family and friends and immortalized in photos. That nightmare ends at the Jessica McClintock boutique on Newbury Street. With dozens of different styles of dresses (including plus-size options and a line by Scott McClintock), the options go way beyond seafoam-green polyester hoopskirts. From the classic, strapless A-line gown to the more form-fitting sheath, from tulle to satin, there's a size and style to flatter every figure. A BU alum, McClintock is no stranger to Boston, and her Newbury boutique has become an institution. After all, if you're always a bridesmaid, never a bride, you might as well look good in the damn thing.

WEDDING CAKES

The Icing on the Cake

230 Adams St., Newton, 617-969-1830;
www.theicingonthecake.com

For 17 years, the Icing on the Cake has provided exactl that for all types of weddings. Its trademark is handmad icing flowers "as lifelike as the ones you carry down th aisle." Clients receive the highly personalized service of one-on-one consultation with the designer, and becaus the shop specializes in cakes, it does them to perfection (It once made a 10-tiered masterpiece that required a lad der to assemble.) The 14 flavors (plus up to four seasona varieties) include Orange Grand Marnier and Decaden Chocolate Chocolate Mousse. The cakes are so beautiful you'll almost feel guilty eating them. iB

BRIDAL HAIRSTYLIST

Javier Berdecia for Daryl Christopher Salon & Day Spa

37 Newbury St., Boston; 617-247-9718; www.dchristopher.com

Javier Berdecia has been doing hair for more than 15 years, and on weekends he concentrates on bridal 'dos. His style ranges from the simple to the elaborate, but he always keeps the look clean. One of his biggest strengths is ensuring that not a single hair is out of place, while avoiding that plastered, helmet-head look. A bride who has the good fortune to secure one of his coveted weekend slots invariably looks (and feels) like the princess she's supposed to be. Berdecia's personal aesthetic leans toward the classical and romantic, and he performs his magic with such ease and dispatch that brides don't have to worry about time constraints and won't feel like they spent more time getting their hair done than planning the wedding.

GOWN SALON

The Altered Bride

376 Boylston St., Boston; 617-859-8289; www.alteredbride.com

Roseanna Martino, owner of the Altered Bride, cares about her clients so much that she ends up attending more weddings than a clergyman and often stays in touch with her brides well into their married lives. Her personal attention and her handpicked assortment of gorgeous gowns (most are her own designs) are two of the reasons her store is always humming. Her staff is trained to treat brides like they've never been treated before, and they can be there on the big day to make sure everything is perfect. An on-staff seamstress makes for one-stop shopping, and the Altered Bride is particularly adept at turning heirloom dresses into modern masterpieces. Martino's frankness ensures that you won't end up with a dress that's unflattering, but she's so sweet and capable that she's like the fairy godmother every bride deserves.

Denis Leary is proud to present the 4th Annual Celebrity Hat Trick to benefit The Leary Firefighters Foundation. This year's event, "Hockey's Greatest skate for America's Bravest," will feature a competitive hockey game pitting 25 of hockey's all-time greatest against each other with celebrity players competing on each team.

Joining Leary on the ice will be Kiefer Sutherland, Michael J. Fox, Tim Robbins and others facing off with Hockey's Greatest.

The mission of The Leary Firefighters Foundation is to provide funding for fire departments to obtain the highest level of equipment, technology and training.

SERENDIPITOUS SHOPPING: OUR UNFETTERED CORRESPONDENT SEEKS OUT THE SALUBRIOUS AND THE CEREBRAL.

SOY AND CHRYSANTHEMUMS

In Untangling My Chopsticks: A Culinary Sojourn in Kyoto, Newton resident Victoria Abbott Riccardi recounts her life in Japan, where she learned all about the food and the tea ceremony called kaiseki.

With a degree from the famed Le Cordon Bleu school behind her and a keen interest in Japan, Victoria Abbott Riccardi plunges, solo, into Kyoto. Her goal: to learn the intricate, subtle and extensive culinary arts connected to the tea kaiseki ceremony. Taken in by a Japanese family, she spends some time teaching English. But mostly she shops, cooks, studies the culinary exoticisms of Japan and eats what seems like miles of food, often in tiny, beautiful bites. She contemplates not just the exotic deliciousness but also the philosophy that flows through the food she is learning to revere. Accustomed to the overspiced Japanese food she used to eat back home, she writes, "Ever so slowly, I started tasting—really tasting—the ingredients. It was like entering a dark room on a sunny day." She slows down to take in the rarefied symbolism of Japanese food, with its attunement to nature, purity and beauty. This is a kind of narrative cookbook, indeed filled with recipes but made more enticing by Riccardi's adventuresome discovery. In elegantly austere Japanese settings she finds things like succulently grilled eels, "loamy tasting chrysanthemum leaves" and salty fermented soybeans. Her food odyssey can inspire your own.

COUNTRY AND HURON

Aya, at 364a Huron Ave. in Cambridge, is a friendly gift shop full of unexpected treats for adults and kids alike. Call 617-354-0027.

In the space formerly occupied by Coromandel sits a charmingly quirky gift shop where, as Gail Stone, the owner says, "You can afford to buy a gift and still have something left over for yourself." Overflowing with neighborhood friendliness, Aya features Stone-invented Body Bibs for babies. The bibs encase the tiny tyke in puffy coverage, patterned with alligators or Clifford the dog, and are designed to contend with the full spinach or green-pea volcano. Co-worker Cindy Yee has made reading stools for kids, which are sweet step-stools painted with giraffes and elephants. Alongside the cute kid-related things you'll find sexy red silk dresses fit for an elegant cocktail party. And Aya offers a taste of the outdoors too, with glistening glass hummingbird feeders and mini Adirondack chairs. Add to those summer flavors Aya's generous blue-striped pottery bowls, aching to embrace rising bread dough. Another of Stone's talents is baking. Her customized cakes ($50 and up) are brilliant with playful details. On one cake, a man plays golf on his hands and knees; on another, a groom jokingly tethered by a ball and chain runs for his freedom. There's also a splendorous Barbie plunged into a huge, cakey hoop skirt.

BRING YOUR OWN SHEETS AND SHEETS OF PAPER

The Fifth House Lodge in Maine offers retreats for writers in a former hunting lodge with an adjacent cabin. Work alone or take one of the workshops offered in July, August or the fall. Call 207-647-3506 or go to www.fifthhouselodge.net. $425 per week for the cabin, $325-$425 per "retreat workshop" weekend.

To foster creative vision, write need two things: time and spac And both should preferably be c pacious, with no intrusion fro nattering technology like ce phones and beepers. Joan Le Hunter runs such an establish ment, in a low-key, high-peacefu ness lodge located an hour nort west of Portland, Maine, whe beauty of house, mountains an sky invite inspiration. In one va ation, the writer simply holes for a week, keeping his or her ow literary counsel and possibly hi ing Hunter, who is also a writi teacher, for some brief critiq ($50 per hour). But the solitu can also be ringed with the company of other writers, in a friendly, pretty atmosphere where participa work at a long writing table. Among the workshops, "The Whole Writer" (Oct. 17-19) emphasizes l tening to the inner voice, following associations into the dreamy, picture-rich right brain. Hunter s the workshop, aimed at people who want to jump-start their writing, is a discovery process, taking t writer down what she calls "many rabbit holes." Another involves shamanistic trance work accom nied by steady drumbeats to bring on altered states of consciousness, which, through a kind of psyc softening, make the mind receptive to imagery and imagination (that one runs Sept. 19-21). Scree writing weekends are also offered. Briefly blocked? Walk a trail through the mountain's majesty.

Wake Up, Little Tuesday...

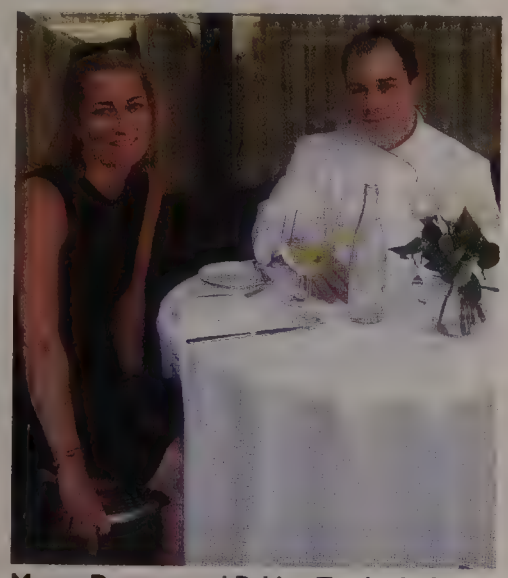
Dinner & a date?...Blue's news & BBQs....

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

Yes it's a great way to meet people over dinner on a Tuesday night, but please keep the focus on matching food and wine, not matching potential dates, says Maura Downes, a former waitress who's put her life savings and all of her energy into a new venture that she calls "Boston's original menu-tasting event provider."

After her inaugural event—a prix-fixe food-and-wine tasting dinner at Peking Tom's that drew about 25 diners—Downes is enthusiastic about forging ahead with her vision of having a chef's table interpretation" (translation: a pay-as-you-go dinner party) in an "interactive atmosphere." The chef discusses the evening's menu and his inspiration. Tax, tip and a gift bag for each guest are included in the cost.

So what's the bottom line? Typically, Tuesday nights are slow, says Downes, and the restaurant benefits from attracting a group of frequent-diner types. Downes, who negotiates a per-person cost with the restaurant, adds what she describes as "a small margin" for herself. And the diners enjoy not only dinner and the company of the chef, but a ready-made dinner party without social stress (hey, it's Tuesday). At this point, Downes is publicizing her venture mostly by word of mouth, but you can reach her at maura@taste-boston.com.



Maura Downes and Peking Tom's chef Marc Orfaly recently hosted a prix-fixe food-and-wine tasting dinner.

SECOND COURSE

Like Elvis, he's left the building, but like Arnold, he'll be back. Steve Johnson, who sold his share in Cambridge's storied Blue Room to former partners Nick Zappa and Deanna Briggs, says he's put up the proverbial Gone Fishin' sign and will take the summer off both to fish and to develop at least one new restaurant project. We'll keep you posted. Meanwhile, Zappa and Briggs have promoted former sous chef Jorge Lopes to fill Johnson's shoes, and they assure loyal patrons that "the entire Blue Room staff remains in place."

Some restaurants stop serving brunch during the summer months, but Tremont 647 has begun to serve a Saturday brunch—a slightly scaled-down version of its Sunday brunch, which is famous for its pajama-clad waitstaff. No word on whether correspondingly skimpier PJs are on the menu. Also in the South End, Rouge owner/chef Andy Husbands is eagerly anticipating the delivery of his Backwoods Smoker any day now. To celebrate, he plans a series of all-you-can-eat barbecue Mondays, priced at $19.50.

That's less than you'll spend for the grilled pizza of the day ($21) at Cafe Louis, which has added 10 seats to a new enclosed patio area. Then again, you don't go to Cafe Louis thinking "value meal." Instead, think Maine lobster with peach and avocado salad; Jamison Farm grilled lamb chop scottadito (Italian for "scorched fingers") with fresh favas, mint, and capers; and lemon cream tart with raspberry-grappa sauce. If you must have barbecue on Newbury Street, Cafe Louis is pairing a panoply of grilled fare with Ravenswood wines and live blues on August 8.

While you're thinking Italian outside the North End, check out The Vault's new summer menu. After years on the West Coast, chef/owner Carmen Quagliata is making the most of local seafood, fresh corn and summer berries. Expect dishes such as crispy soft-shell crab with chilled sweet corn juice and red chile vinegar dressing; lobster with Sardinian cous cous in lobster-basil broth with sweet peas; and panna cotta with seasonal fruit. Make sure to visit the bar: Recently hired Michael Ray, formerly of Abe & Louie's, has been honored more than once as one of the IMPROPER's Beloved Bartenders. Besides fancy-pants cocktails, there's great-sounding bar food: an artisanal cheese plate with red-pepper marmellata, flavored honey and crostini, or Calabrian sardine and red-chile spread with toasted focaccia. iB

WINE

Big, Brash Petite Sirah

BY SANDY BLOCK MW

Warning: Petite sirah will stain your teeth. Also your gums, lips and any other body part with which it makes contact, so don't even think of having a glass and then trying to convince someone you haven't been drinking. In fact, petite sirah's so deep in color that California's zinfandel producers routinely blend in vast quantities of this opaque, gutsy red grape to darken and improve the flavor of their wine. In other words, it's not even remotely "petite" (think the neighborhood seven-footer whom the kids nickname "Shorty").

In fact, the grape happens not to be syrah either, but another red variety known originally as durif that has never attracted much of a fan club in its homeland of France and has, in the last few decades, virtually disappeared there. There's some controversy about whether peloursin, another obscurity from southern France, is also planted in California under the name petite sirah, but while the truth of its origins may be shrouded in mist, it's clear that California petite sirah is beginning to attract an underground, almost cultlike following. Part of the reason for the trend is that scattered throughout the state, but mostly in the hillsides off the beaten path pockets of Mendocino, Sonoma, Napa and Monterey counties, there are patches of "old vine" petite sirah vineyards that yield very concentrated, deeply flavorful fruit; devoted winemakers can produce wondrously delicious wines with these grapes at bargain prices. Remember: The older the vine, the better the wine, and among California's most venerable are the free-standing petite sirah vines that are scattered throughout the state. However, since the grape doesn't even make it onto the Top 40 list of most wine shops or restaurants, it requires some passion and faith on the part of a wine company even to produce a petite sirah. So those who work with the grape are believers, and their dedication reflects a sense that some of these gnarly, grumpy old petite sirah vines, as opposed to the vast shining fields of merlot planted in the past decade, constitute California's most enduring vine heritage.

Not all petite sirah is bargain priced; there are some fancy-pedigreed bottles that cost $30 and more, but the average good honest petite sirah can be yours for less than $15 and, in some cases, $10. Because of the grapes' thick skins and rustic, in-your-face flavors, you don't lose as much incrementally in terms of quality by trading down from the more expensive to the cheaper ones as you would with, say, a pinot noir or cabernet.

And, for those of us with good storage and reason to believe we may not be moving every year, petite sirahs of all stripes promise tremendous aging potential at a cut-rate price. I've got some in the cellar from the mid-'80's with fading $9.99 price tags that are even more delicious now than they were 10 years ago and show no signs of quitting.

Why talk about this wine equivalent of heavyweight woolens in mid-July when most of us are thinking sleeveless, silky and see-through? Because petite sirah is a brawler that's just quintessential with grilled and barbecued meat of all types. When I start smelling that sweet spicy smoke rising up, I'm thinking I want some of that dark purple, brash, fruit-loaded, black peppery–tasting stuff that's a bit on the rough side in my glass. It just works. (If you think about it, how are you going to match up a delicate, understated, subtle-flavored wine with the fiery flavors of sizzling meat from the grill?) The key is you have to serve the wine a little bit on the cool side, as in 55 to 60 degrees. It will warm up quick, but if you use that as a starting point it's a perfect foil for anything from kebabs to burgers to ribs to charred beef. Or, for that matter, blackened fish. IB

Performing Arts: Three Enchanted Evenings

Watching South Pacific in a theater is enjoyable. Watching South Pacific performed aboard a World War II destroyer is a different experience altogether. So grab a lawn chair and park yourself in Charlestown Navy Yard for Opera Boston and Boston Landmarks Orchestra's production of Rodgers and Hammerstein's musical. Adapted from stories by James Michener, South Pacific details a love affair between a nurse and a French plantation owner during World War II. This fully staged production will be performed on and in front of the USS Cassin Young at dusk, immediately following the U.S. Navy's traditional Evening Colors Ceremony. Charlestown Navy Yard, Boston (617-451-3388). Aug. 8-10, 8:15 pm. Free.

LATE JULY AND EARLY AUGUST

Tastings and CityScope: Road Trippin'

There's nothing like midsummer in the city: Gone are the lines at the movies; snagging a seat on the T (except on the Green Line when the Sox are playing) is a breeze; and you can get a reservation at Radius or L'Espalier at the snap of your fingers. It's wonderful...until you start feeling you're the only one without fun vacation plans. At that point, it's time to escape. Here are a few tantalizing weekend out-of-town options that won't squander your precious vacation days. Head north for the New England Barbecue Championships in Windsor, Vt., July 26-27. It's two days of Harpoon beer, live music, tasty food and a firsthand look at master barbecuers practicing their craft. Or head east to the Cape for Wellfleet's first annual Clam Boil July 26. Feast on littlenecks at this benefit for the United Wellfleet Shellfishermen. Or head west to watch three days of competition by 200 of the country's most accomplished horses and riders at the Over the Walls Horse Trials in Hardwick, Mass., Aug. 1-3. See Tastings on page 102 and CityScope on page 110 for more information.

Movies: Not Trailer Trash

It's no secret that many film buffs make a point to get to the show in time to see the previews. Hollywood even has an awards show called the Golden Trailer that recognizes the best work of the advertising firms that create previews. Two upcoming events at local theaters offer the chance to get your feature-length fill of film trailers from days gone by. On July 24, the Brattle is showing Trailer Treats, which highlights some of the forgotten gems from the Brattle's trailer archive interspersed with short films and cartoons. There are extra incentives to go to the 8:30 pm screening: barbecue, beer and old-time tunes from the Walker & Jay Show ($12 advance/ $15 day of). On Aug. 1, the Harvard Film Archive presents a program titled T is for Trailers, a sampling of the archive's 1,000-plus trailers. They'll be screening classics like the trailers for Kentucky Fried Movie and the 1975 Don Johnson cult film A Boy and His Dog. HFA conservator Julie Buck introduces the show. Brattle Theatre, 40 Brattle St., Cambridge (617-876-6837). 3:30, 5:30 and 8:30 pm. Harvard Film Archive, 24 Quincy St., Cambridge (617-495-4700). 7 pm. $7.

Books & Poetry: Take Cover

There's no doubt about it. Book readings are getting more creative. Just look at cutting-edge series like Cover 2 Cover, which was started in Ma by Newtonville Books' literary maven Tim Huggins and author Steve Almond. At Cover 2 Cover events, musicians play their favorite songs written by other musicians and writers read works by their favorite writers—and there's always copious amounts of alcohol. The next Cove 2 Cover event, at the Paradise Lounge, features zydeco master Mickey Bones, who incorporates the sounds of Chuck Berry into his Cajun tune and roots maestro Boris McCutcheon (above), who is slated to belt out his version of "Take Me out to the Ballgame." Short-story writer and Renaissance man Karl Iagnemma takes a break from robotics research a MIT to read works by Donald Barthelme, Natick native Lewis Robinson reads from Harold Brodky and writer Chris Castellani has memorized a Grace Paley story to read aloud. Jennifer Haight and Mike Rosovsky als read. The ubiquitous Almond plays DJ, spinning covers all night. Parad Lounge, 969 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-562-8814). 8 pm. $5.

THU./AUG. 7

CityScope: Always a Bridesmaid...

Maybe you got lucky. Maybe when you were a bridesmaid, the bride chose a simple, sophisticated black number that you've since worn to a black-tie event or a swanky cocktail party with no one the wiser about its original purpose. If you're like the rest of us, however, the pariah of your closet is an unflattering, Easter egg–colored frock (perhaps even a collection of them) that for sentimental reasons you've been unable to throw away. The IMPROPER's second annual Bridesmaids' Ball at Hurricane O'Reilly's Aug. 7 offers the unprecedented chance to put that bridesmaid's gown to use and even to benefit from its unprettiness. Pull out your "favorite" bridesmaid's dress—the more outrageous, the better—and get ready to catch the bouquet. There's a grand prize for the gal with the sharpest elbows. Hurricane O'Reilly's, 150 Canal St., Boston (617-722-0161). 7-10 pm. $5 (to benefit the Susan G. Komen Breast Cancer Foundation's Race for the Cure).

Beyond Independence Day

Jose McIntyre's "All That's Unique About July" party salutes the month's lesser-known special days

It seems that everyone's got a cause, and many of the days and weeks of July are devoted to those causes. For instance, did you know that July 27 is "Take Your Houseplant for a Walk Day"? Or that July 7-12 is "Copious Compliments Week"? Maybe you missed the chance to dish out the flattery that week, but you can still celebrate the other bogus and amusing "events" of July at Jose McIntyre's "Everything That's Unique About July" party July 24.

Mix 98.5's Kelly Malone (above) presides over the festivities, which will include a hot dog–eating contest (July is National Hot Dog Month), a houseplant relay race (if a walk is good for a plant, surely a run is even better) and a horseshoe toss (July 7-13 is National Farriers Week). If you want to celebrate International Group B Strep Awareness Month or Rat-catchers Day (July 22), however, you're on your own. Proceeds benefit the Special Olympics—July 20 is, among other things, Special Olympics Day.

Jose McIntyre's, 160 Milk St., Boston (617-451-9460). July 24, 7 pm-close. $2.—Ezra Dyer

Buffalo Soldiers conducts irreverent army maneuvers

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Ray Elwood, the conniving and charismatic soldier Joaquin Phoenix plays in the black comedy Buffalo Soldiers, would get a kick out of the U.S. Army's "Army of One" marketing campaign. The slogan is, I suppose, meant to suggest self-reliance; to me, it's always unintentionally promoted selfishness over teamwork. And selfishness is exactly what Elwood, a wheeler-dealer in the tradition of comic anti-heroes such as The Phil Silvers Show's Ernie Bilko and Catch-22's Milo Minderbender, is all about.

Joaquin Phoenix plays a charismatic soldier who dates the sergeant's daughter, played by Anna Paquin.

The army is just one big warehouse for Elwood, who's stationed in Stuttgart in 1989, a time when, he tells us in voice-over, the army was desperate for men and opened its ranks to convicts. (Surprise, surprise—Elwood is one of the cons.) But it's peacetime, the Iron Curtain is crumbling, and those assigned to handle our army's resources have a major case of idle hands. So what's a bored soldier in a supply battalion, with sales skills and dreams of ill-gotten gains, to do?

Maybe cook morphine into heroin and hawk it to the other equally bored soldiers on the base? Maybe get a requisition for 1,000 gallons of Mop & Glo past his oblivious commanding officer (Ed Harris) and sell most of it on the German black market? Maybe hijack two truckloads of rocket launchers and other assault weapons, after the drivers get blown away in an explosion started by a stoned crew of a runaway tank? Maybe barter those weapons for enough raw materials to cook more heroin than Elwood and his cohorts have ever dreamed of selling?

Maybe all of the above.

In between his schemes, Elwood also finds time to be the boy-toy of the CO's independent wife (Elizabeth McGovern) and to butt heads with the aptly named Robert E. Lee (Scott Glenn), the new "top sergeant" in his company. He strikes back by dating the gung ho sarge's shapely daughter (Anna Paquin), who's no wallflower herself.

There are no good guys in Buffalo Soldiers, yet director Gregor Jordan and writers Eric Axel Weiss and Nora Maccoby, adapting Robert O'Connor's novel, wring sympathy from their characters by making the army base a supremely absurd example of human endeavor gone awry and by giving the characters clear motivations. At heart, the movie is a tale of the bored (Elwood, the CO's wife), the rebellious (the sergeant's daughter) and the misguided (the CO, the sergeant).

There is also the movie's tasty anti-authoritarian streak, in which the neat structure of the military is no match for the unrelenting messiness of human behavior. The physical gags can get extreme, especially when the stoned tank crew wreaks its inept havoc on a German village. But Buffalo Soldiers shows young men in uniform acting as young men often do, something most military movies shy away from. Ego, stupidity and pettiness do not mysteriously vanish when people are together in the military, except maybe in Mel Gibson movies. So, in the tradition of Three Kings, M*A*S*H, Apocalypse Now, Full Metal Jacket and Catch-22, Buffalo Soldiers is laced with opportunistic behavior, office politics and infighting.

The infighting takes on more and more dimension as Elwood wages his escalating battles: to keep the CO clueless, to frustrate the top sarge, to please the violent German crooks to whom he wants to sell the stolen weapons and to outsmart his rival in scheming, the base's head MP (Shiek Mahmud-Bey). But don't worry about Elwood. In a catastrophe, the rats are always the most likely to survive, even charismatic, rebel-underdogs like him.

Fortunately, Buffalo Soldiers has shown survival skill too. Miramax snapped up its distribution rights at the 2001 Toronto Film Festival on Sept. 10, 2001, and—after the next day's events—has sat on it until now. Actually, the movie couldn't be more timely, following the carefully orchestrated Gulf War II. The behind-the-scenes, "movie they didn't want you to see" drama adds some oomph to Buffalo Soldiers, though that shouldn't be overestimated. This military comedy is hardly original, but it's a wry and raucous ride. iB

Has a movie ever plunged the viewer into grea moral ambiguity than Andrew Jarecki's docume tary about the Friedman family of Great Ne Long Island? They splintered apart in the l 1980s, when father Arnold and youngest son Je were accused of molesting Arnold's computer s dents. On one hand, it's easy to see how the t Friedmans, and Arnold in particular, might guilty: He first got into trouble for possessing ch porn, and he confessed to having improper re tions with minors at other times in his life. On other hand, the police's investigation and the timony that investigators got from the kids both very suspect. It's impossible to believe Friedmans are totally in the wrong, or totally ri in their denials. You have to believe the truth somewhere in the middle. So is the movie a c tionary tale about evil lurking beneath an eve day suburban surface or about the power of sugg tion and the abuse of power? It's both. (At Cop Place, Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Charlie's Angels: Full Throttle ★★
The first movie was a blast. So why is the seco such a dud? Maybe it's because almost nothin done here that isn't a parody of or a nod to so earlier piece of pop culture (one of the villa only character development is that he has sim tattoos and the same theme music as Rob DeNiro in Cape Fear). Maybe it's the utterly un markable "comeback" of Demi Moore, who pla villainess and who showed more humor in Jane. Maybe it's the dominance of special effe over characters. Bernie Mac and Cameron Diaz as enjoyable as ever, but this series has jumped shark. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburb

Dirty Pretty Things ★★★
For years, director Stephen Frears has been flitt back and forth between Hollywood movies like Fidelity and smaller movies made in his native land. This intimate drama, set in the subcultur London's illegal-immigrant community, is his "small movie" since the rowdy Roddy Doyle ada tion, The Van. Chiwetel Ejiofer and Audrey Tau are sympathetic as two co-workers in a Lon hotel who are repeatedly taken advantage o bosses and immigration officials. Ejiofer, who pla disgraced Nigerian doctor hanging on to his self spect, is especially affecting, and although the gets more intricate than expected, Frears never sorts to sentimentality in getting us to care for heroes. (Opens Aug. 1.)

Finding Nemo ★★★
The latest computer-animated comedy from P doesn't stray very far from the quest plots of Toy Story movies and A Bug's Life, but it's a re to form after the weak Monsters, Inc. The dig animation continues to get more expressive, human characters are again wisely kept to a m mum. This story of a fish trying to find his who was grabbed by a scuba diver, features equ expressive work from the voice cast, especially bert Brooks as the overprotective father and E DeGeneres as the forgetful fish who helps him his quest. The amusing, but little-seen, early P short "Knick Knacks" precedes the film. Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Hollywood Homicide ★★
Writer-director Ron Shelton's mix of com drama, sex, philosophy and male bonding has o worked—just recall Bull Durham and White Can't Jump. But here the ingredients are like pi of a jigsaw puzzle that aren't that interesting don't really fit together. An investigation in quadruple homicide and Shelton's typically joc humor don't exactly commingle, to use a word movie likes, and Shelton is so busy stressing fact that Harrison Ford's and Josh Hartnett's c acters would rather be moonlighting as, res tively, a realtor and a yoga instructor, that the not very believable as detectives. Semi-compe and totally mediocre. (At Boston Common, way and suburbs.)

The Hulk ★★½
Traumatic Childhood + Weird Science = Trou Oddball Hero. That's the all-too-familiar co book formula at work, as in Batman, Spider and Daredevil. But Ang Lee's movie gets the se right, with Eric Bana as scientist Bruce Ban who has no idea that his birth father (Nick No also a scientist, passed on the mutation he ind in himself. Of course, all the physicality of plot—after being juiced with gamma rays, D mutant Bruce turns into the Hulk whenev gets angry—is just a stand-in for the emoti baggage parents pass on to children. The movie's snappy editing, which is full of split screens, nifty wipes and dissolves, also adds energy. Yet as the lengthy story moves along, and we get more Hulk and less Bruce, the characters and the drama recede and the special effects and large-scale action take over. Like its title character, the movie gets a little too big for its britches. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Legally Blonde 2: Red, White & Blonde ★½
Reese Witherspoon's performance kept the first movie, a so-so Clueless knock-off, respectable. But the second time isn't the charm for this numbing sequel, in which the good things about sunny heroine Elle Woods (optimism, ideals, persistence) are a pittance next to her obnoxious qualities (the bad case of shopaholism, the pathological anthropomorphizing of her dog, the conspicuous materialism). This time she wins over a bunch of naysaying elitists in Washington, just as she did in Cambridge in the first movie, culminating in the "borrowing" of the climax of Mr. Smith Goes to Washington. For a movie that tries to be inspiring, this is unbelievably uninspired. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Masked & Anonymous ★★
Sometimes the writing comes alive in this comedy starring and pseudonymously written by Bob Dylan. And the musical footage is memorable, especially Dylan's version of "Dixie." But is Dylan playing himself or his character, called Jack Fate? That's the question that's never really answered, and it's the most confusing thing in an overly puzzling movie set in an America that's deteriorated into a Third World country. The deep cast includes Jeff Bridges, Jessica Lange, John Goodman and Luke Wilson—and some of the actors (Val Kilmer, Mickey Rourke, Giovanni Ribisi and Bruce Dern) even come off looking good. But they're in the minority. (At Kendall Square.)

The Matrix Reloaded ★★½
This spotty sequel to 1999's pop-culture touchstone holds true to the theory that the middle movie is usually the weakest of a trilogy (that's assuming this fall's third movie is better). Where the first was intimate and tightly constructed, the new movie is less specific in its internal logic and has a large scale

Nick Stahl, Arnold Schwarzenegger and Claire Danes help stop computers from taking over the world in the futuristic action thriller Terminator 3: Rise of the Machines.

that is sometimes clumsy (including council meetings and war talk reminiscent of, yikes, The Phantom Menace). The sequel seems even more like a videogame than the first, in its increasingly elaborate, animation-dependent fight scenes (which come off as self-parody at times) and in the "leveled" structure (fight to see the Oracle, move up to fight to see the Keymaker, move up to fight your way into the Source, etc.). The heavies have all the fun this time, including Hugo Weaving's Agent Smith, who can now replicate himself at will, and the snippy Frenchman played by Lambert Wilson. Not bad, but not as satisfying as hoped. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Northfork ★
The Polish Brothers debuted with the beautiful Twin Falls Idaho, but like their second film, Jackpot, this third film is drearily dull. A minimalist tale of the 1950s evacuation of a small Montana town to make way for a dam and a lake, Northfork might have had a dusty Last Picture Show lyricism (and this film shares old country tunes and a washed-out look with that 1970s classic). But one half of the story, about the six men getting paid to evacuate homeowners, only touches upon the human reality of the situation about half the time. And the other half of the story, a dream that an ill boy has, is about as pretentious and uninteresting as any plot could be. (At Kendall Square.)

Spellbound ★★★½
Jeffrey Blitz's documentary follows eight junior high schoolers with a magnificent obsession: they're all contestants in the 1999 National Spelling Bee. The movie takes them from their regionals through the Washington, D.C., finals, and it has quirky charm to spare. The kids make up an impressively broad cross section—boys and girls, city and country, white and of color—and the Bee really brings their families together and lets thes smart kids, often misfits back in their hometown bond with others like themselves. The finals als generate more dramatic tension than any othe movie this year, by far. (At Copley Place, Kenda Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Swimming Pool ★★½
French writer-director Francois Ozon has mad somber movies like Under the Sand and playfu movies like 8 Women. His English-language debu seems like an attempt to blend both types, by pai ing the first's Charlotte Rampling and the second Ludivine Sagnier. Rampling plays a dowdy Englis mystery writer whose publisher (Charles Dance offers her his home in the south of France for writing holiday. The unexpected arrival of th publisher's horny French daughter (Sagnier) spoi the working vacation, but it sure livens up th movie. Sagnier's devil-may-care sensuality is a he luva lot more fun than the slow Rampling pro logue, and the two women embark on a passive-ag gressive cat-and-mouse game. The payoff is wa too subtle and puzzling to deliver the neede oomph, though, and the movie remains mostly showcase for Sagnier's devilish performance. (A Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

Terminator 3: Rise of the Machines ★★★
It's been nearly 20 years since the first Terminato and for the last 10 years, Arnold Schwarzenegge has been a total joke. Yet this sequel improbabl comes through. Compared with the other b movies this summer, its story is meaty, its concern serious and its treatment dramatic. Arnold travel back from the future again (in a different andro shell) to protect John Connor (Nick Stahl), the f ture hero who will help the humans beat back th computers who take over the world. Also dragge into the fight this time is Claire Danes, who's su prised to learn she's also going to be a future revol tionary. Super-robot killing machine Kristanna Loken makes a better icy villainess than De Moore in Charlie's Angels: Full Throttle, an Schwarzenegger excels at the role for which he wa always best suited. This is definitely the drive movie of the summer. (At Boston Common, Fe way and suburbs.)

2 Fast 2 Furious ★★

Without the original's Vin Diesel (the Steven Seagal of the new millennium), the sequel isn't quite as obnoxious as the original. But it is almost as dumb. Once again, everyone acts like they're extras in a music video—which, considering how the street races are edited to music, isn't entirely incorrect. This just might be the world's most expensive pissing contest, and the "Look at me! Look at my car!" desperation of most of the characters is downright silly. The plot involves Paul Walker (whose character is now an ex-cop) and Tyrese going undercover to take down a drug smuggler (Cole Hauser), and still managing to indulge in enough male bonding for three movies (gee, who's on whose tail in this race?). The movie achieves its goal of throwing in one of those races every 15 minutes, but I'll take a grade-Z hot-rod movie over this one's product-placement, soundtrack-deal, MTV slickness any day. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

28 Days Later ★★★

Trainspotting director Danny Boyle's apocalyptic sci-fi/action film owes a lot to those of George Romero, especially Dawn of the Dead. Still, it's a creepy and lively blend of character drama, zombie film, social commentary, vampire film and action, set in motion when a group of animal-rights activists frees rage-infected lab primates. The animals violently attack and infect the activists, who attack other humans and so on, until nearly all of England (and perhaps the world) is acting like bloodthirsty soccer hooligans. The movie follows Jim (Cillian Murphy), who awakens from a coma into this new world. He meets up with the few uninfected people left, and they try to find any remaining vestige of society and stay alive. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

MUSIC

In His Own Time

After decades out of the spotlight, jazz legend Jimmy Scott has found a place for his distinctive voice

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

For 60 years, people have thought Jimmy Scott was a woman when they first heard him sing. "I've had that said many times, and I pay it no mind," he says. "The song has to come forth. It's in the soul. How it comes forth, I'm not the determiner. All I can do is deliver it as God created it."

Scott's high-pitched tenor is the result of Kallmann's syndrome, a hereditary hormonal deficiency that stunted his growth at puberty. But the wiry jazz stylist was left with a voice that was not only unique, but emotionally penetrating.

Jimmy Scott's career was reignited in 1991 when he was rediscovered singing at a funeral and landed a major record deal

"It's a gift," says Scott of his voice. "It has rewarded me in so many ways, and I'm grateful for it. I've got to accept it as the truth."

That truth, in turn, won many admirers. Billie Holiday once said Scott was her favorite singer. Marvin Gaye took a tape of Scott to Belgium when he had a bout with depression. Nancy Wilson acknowledged Scott as a major influence. And Madonna claimed he was the only singer that made her cry.

"It was always the ballads for me," says Scott, who performs Aug. 2 at the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum with his band, the Jazz Expressions. "It's got to mean something. Are you saying something to the people? Are you embracing them?"

Growing up in Cleveland, Scott and his nine siblings were placed in foster care by his father when Scott was 13, after his mother died in a traffic accident. He drew early inspiration as a performer from Judy Garland. "She gave you the anxiety to be a part of the thing," he says.

Scott found himself at the jazz crossroads of the '40s and '50s, hanging out with Holiday as well as sax giants Charlie Parker and Lester Young, whose playing left its own stamp on Scott's lingering phrases and vibrato. "In their music, you could hear a message," says the singer, who sat in with both players. "They blew their horns like they were telling a story. It was introducing you to something about life."

But when it comes to stories, it would be hard to match Scott's life, as detailed in a new biography, Faith in Time, written by David Ritz. "That's what it's all about, having faith in time," Scott says. "You've got to have patience."

Scott, whose 78th birthday was July 17, endured a string of setbacks in his career. His record company woes included a frustrating '50s stint with Savoy, whose indifferent owner resurfaced in the '60s to scuttle potential career-breaking records for Scott on two major labels, claiming the singer was under contract.

It wasn't until 1991 that Scott landed another major record deal—after being rediscovered by label executives when he sang at the funeral of songwriter friend Doc Pomus. In the quarter-century before that, Scott worked as a busboy, hotel clerk, elevator operator and nurse's aide, singing to senior citizens and avoiding the trap of bitterness.

"God gave you life, you live it," says Scott, who claims that his financial state during those years was the closest thing he had to a regret. "But then, it became a thing where finance didn't mean a damn thing. It was a living."

Scott has made his recent records for the jazz label Milestone, which just released Moon Glow, featuring standards from "How Long Has This Been Going On?" and "I Thought About You" to the Beatles' "Yesterday." It includes pianist Cyrus Chestnut, drummer Lewis Nash and saxophonists Hank Crawford and longtime Scott associate David "Fathead" Newman, and was produced by Todd Barkan, who booked a Japanese tour for Scott in the early '90s.

"He knew the type of music I was interested in," Scott says of jazz producer Barkan. "You're rewarded by having those people in the business to support the music you like.

"There are men my age who were in show business that are gone," says the singer, speaking from his home in Cleveland before a mid-July tour of Japan. "I'm still hanging in."

While he can look small and frail when he approaches the stage, walking with a limp he has had since a 1971 fall, he grows animated at the microphone.

"Hey babe, you'd think I was a jitterbug," says Scott, whose enduring work ethic can be traced both to his mother and to Estelle "Caledonia" Young, in whose vaudeville troupe he got his start.

"Either you do a job right or you don't do it at all," he says. "On any stage with Estelle Young, you did it with determination, you did it with love of what you were doing. You felt it all coming to you." iB

Head of the House

Josh Wink combines mainstream success with street cred

It's rare in the dance-music industry for an artist to enjoy mainstream crossover success and still maintain underground credibility with clubbers. There are exceptions to every rule, however, and Philadelphia native Josh Wink is definitely one of them. Although Wink hit it big on the radio with his 1998 chart-topping hit "Higher State of Consciousness," he continues to play a vital role in clubland.

Wink's musical roots date back to early 1990s rave culture, and his sound still reflects a freewheeling approach to the dance floor. He deliberately steers clear of genre boundaries, playing and producing music that falls squarely between house and techno. "I'm not one for holding people to a single, specific genre," says Wink. "I love being on the median in between." Wink's ability to defy expectations and appeal to different audiences has served him well over the years; earlier this summer, he found himself playing on the main stage at Bonnaroo, the mammoth jam band festival held in Manchester, Tenn.

On Friday, Aug. 1, Josh Wink returns to Avaland at Avalon in support of Profound Sounds Volume 2, his first DJ mix compilation since 1999. True to form, he remixed every track on the compilation before mixing and recording the album. From searing acid house to Radiohead remixes and tracky techno, Avaland-goers can expect the unexpected.

Josh Wink, Avalon, 15 Lansdowne St. (617-262-2424). Aug. 1, 10 pm-2 am. $20. No dress code, 19+.—Daniel Spurling

Harvard graduate captures the low-wage life of university workers in black and white

One night while hanging out with tuxedo-clad friends at one of Harvard University's fraternity-like "finals clubs," undergrad Greg Halpern noticed custodian Carol-Ann Malatesta quietly cleaning up around them. He began talking to her and found that despite working full-time, Malatesta, like many other Harvard custodians, couldn't afford to feed her family on the university's wages. "It blew my mind," he says. "I said to myself, 'You have to start recording these [stories].'"

So Halpern, a history and literature major, began a yearlong senior project photographing and interviewing Harvard service workers. After graduating in 1998, he continued his project while volunteering for the Living Wage Campaign, which culminated in April 2001's sit-in and Harvard administrators' decision to increase the average service worker's hourly wage from $9 to $16. Photos from Halpern's forthcoming book, Harvard Works Because We Do (October 2003), are on display at the university's Carpenter Center for the Visual Arts through Aug. 17.

"I went into this hoping for direct political change, but now I feel that each story has its own message," Halpern says. "I just hope that people will look at each portrait and relate to these people and see a side of things they are not familiar with." Harvard University Carpenter Center for the Visual Arts, 24 Quincy St., Cambridge (617-495-3251). www.ves.fas.harvard.edu. Mon.-Fri. 9 am-11:30 pm; Sat., 9 am-11:30 pm; Sun., 12-11:30 pm. Free. Through Aug. 17.—Melanie Ryan

B.

From the first moment I saw you I knew I was in love. I never had enough courage to do anything about it. When I talk to you I get so nervous I can't stand it. I wish I knew how you felt, if you are seeing anybody, if our age difference is a problem and simply if I have a chance at all. I know there is a lot against us, like the fact that we work at the same company and it would be awkward for some people. I think we have a lot in common and it would be fun to find out just how much. Hopefully you are reading this and realizing that the right person is closer than you think.

Eighth-floor Girl, I Will Remember You

You are the Chinese-American girl living somewhere else but visiting your grandma and sister in the Chinatown apartment building once every week. On the evening of July 2, before you two were about to get in the elevator after coming back from the laundry room, your sister looked over her shoulder just to catch me glaring at your back. I thought her looking back was a deliberate action and yes, she is right if she sensed that I have a crush on you. Since the first sight, I've been charmed by your delicate and mature feminine beauty, your slim figure, focused and poised facial expressions and swift and brisk walking. Everything about you simply looks so glamorous and attractive in my eyes. You never know how I wish God could extend my brief encounter with you each time to eternity, and in that case I would never move my eyes off you. I never talked to you and only talked indirectly to your sister once. The first reason is shyness. The second and the more important one is that since I earned my MBA from a top 20 B-school last year, I've never been able to land a decent job in this sluggish economy and I really don't know where I'll end up in the near future. So, I don't wish to bother you. Recently, I've decided to go back to my home country in August and you will remain a mystery to me, forever, unless you get a chance to read this. Before I leave, I just want to say this: In the journey of life, perhaps we are doomed to pass by each other, but "I Will Remember You" (Sarah McLachlan). But if you see this, e-mail me.

Similar Sweet Tooth

You: well-dressed with charming, boyish good looks in the lobby shop of 99 High Street. Me: blonde, petite, Ann Taylor suit with the short skirt, nice smile (well, that is what the two guys behind the counter say). I have noticed that we share the same love of Swedish fish—I wonder what other kinds of sweet desires we have in common? Let's get together and find out.

Meet Me in St. Louis

Hi Francis. You're a Harvard grad student who said he loves to learn. Unfortunately I'm so cheap I can't e-mail you back after we got in touch through Match! If you know Mr. Bill, then maybe we can get together before the next Cards game, eh? Formerly from the Loop, now stuck in the South End, Sarah.

Dear Chick Riding the 66,

You know what? It took a hell of a lot of courage for me to tell you, a total stranger, riding on the same bus, sitting next to me, that I thought you were cute. Maybe you weren't interested. Maybe people hit on you all the time. Maybe you thought I was a fraud or some kind of strange bus-riding pervert, but that does not excuse the fact that you were rude. The next time someone tells you that you're a good-looking woman, don't give them a look of death, just say thanks and consider yourself complimented. It's more meaningful when it comes from a member of your own sex, because honey, I know what I look like in the morning without the gel, and the outfits, and all the other crap that comes with being a woman, and I can take a pretty good guess that you aren't that damn cute then, either.

Davis Square, June 30 around Noon.

To the person who left their doggie in their car with the windows tightly sealed on a 98-degree day: We walked past your car and witnessed a very distressed pet, howling and panting and looking like she/he needed air. If you own a pet and leave it in your car, please be thoughtful and mindful. It can reach 120 degrees in no time in there. We are sure you want your doggie to be happy and cool and comfy. And live a long life.

Just Being Bitter

If only you could see how wonderful you are. Your only flaw is that you don't want to see it. I used to think I was lucky to have a guy who was so amazing, incredibly attractive, had everything that I could hope for, yet didn't have a huge ego. But because you are so convinced that you are a loser, that makes you one. And you really lost big-time. I can't believe that you choose to be so self-destructive instead of believing in someone who is just trying to make you happy. Someday, you'll meet a girl who treats you like dirt and cheats on you, and you'll think you love her, because then you can continue feeling sorry for yourself. The only thing I'm sorry for is having wasted time and energy on you. So maybe you were right. You're not so wonderful after all. Happy now?
—Me

I'll See You Again

After the night I met you in that famous club in the Theater District, who would have thought that we would have something so intense going on during the months after. Your irresistible looks and beautiful personality give you what it takes to make you such an attractive and desirable woman. I guess as time goes by I just realize how intense were our moments together. Every minute was a challenge for me; even though I felt so much inner peace, because of our reasons I had to make the best of every opportunity we had to be by ourselves, maybe because I never knew when someone could step in and make us behave like nothing happened between us. I'll never forget how it feels to caress your silky hair through my hands, or hold your hand under the dinner table. I really enjoyed every minute spent with you. I would definitely do it again and again without any variation. I hope you had the same enjoyable and exciting moments that I did. Thank you for everything and all we've done. I'll always be looking for you in my dreams.
—Kittendreams2003@hotmail.com

Three More Minutes

I saw you on a Friday night at Kinglis Hall. You: a beautiful blonde wearing a fabulous outfit and great pants, sittin at a table near the bar with some guy who it looked like you were on a first date with (you were shaking his hand). He seemed like a jerk and probably doesn't deserve you. I saw you on you way back from the bathroom. Me: ta brown-haired man wearing a lavend shirt and Clark Kent glasses. You cau my eye and we talked briefly, maybe only three minutes, but it was enoug to know you were the woman for me every way. You are witty, smart, kind and beautiful and it would be my ho to treat you like the angel that you a Three minutes just wasn't enough a need much, much more. You may no know it now but I am perfect for you dump that loser you were with and come spend three, five or even eight minutes with me. You won't be sorry

JULY 23 – AUGUST 12, 2003 BY ROCKIE GARDINER

LEO JULY 23-AUGUST 22

Outright, unapologetic lionizing: Expect to receive every compliment you deserve, and some you don't, while so much planetary attention is focused on Leo. This is the time to look as glamorous as you dare, to act as imperiously as you can get away with. Should anyone oppose you, it's bound to be some poor soul with delusions of grandeur. Or another Leo. Having imaginative, idealistic Neptune in your Aquarius house of allies and antagonists can be tricky. Who's perpetrating a fraud? Whose talent is the real deal? Who should you believe?

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

You're bright-eyed, bushy-tailed and into everybody's business. Natural curiosity may one day kill the cat, but your inquisitiveness right now is based more on learning how beneficial your relationship with other signs can be. An Aquarian or Pisces may insist that friendship is the number-one priority, but try not to hedge your bets. Loyalty to family is what the Sagittarian and Scorpion will harp on. Also, how about healing the rift? The Leos might be too proud to show vulnerability, but we all know they are kittens at heart.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

You could be torn between playing with a couple of wild cards—jokers whose appetite for adventure exceeds your own—and being entertained by one or two sports determined to show you a good time. Either way, you won't lose out. However, after your Venus ruler gets to Leo you'll probably enjoy sitting in the lap of luxury more than the thrills of another roller-coaster relationship. It's a matter of blending the very good with the not-so-good, while maintaining Libra's right to change your mind without offending anyone.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

This summer is special. Make the most of the favors being offered, the sympathetic chords you're striking simply because your Mars co-ruler is in Pisces, a compatible water sign. Next summer is another interesting, but not as rewarding, story. This week keep an ear open for information about a money matter that'll help you attain a career objective. But be patient; it'll take a few more weeks before the deed or the deal is done. In the meantime, immerse yourself in those healing waters and learn all you can about that career move.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

Reach out to a wider audience. While your expansive Jupiter ruler is in Leo, a spirited fire sign that generously rewards the Centaur's knowledge, you shouldn't have any trouble getting your viewpoint across. The lighter and brighter you make your message, the better it will be received. This is also a good time to polish your image, so go for a makeover and send someone else the bill. Other joint money matters, such as insurance, inheritance and investments, shouldn't be a problem once you find the time to do a bit of business.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

Deal with the relationship, be it with a co-worker or partner in crime. Whatever problem is hindering its further development or is getting in the way of a closer alliance will benefit now from some attention on both your parts. Since there are no other red flags being waved at this juncture, it pays to make an effort to clear away the obstacle and clear up a misunderstanding. The issue might not be resolved forever, but for the time being, i.e., the rest of the summer, it should be smooth sailing.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

You're not exactly invisible, but with so much attention being paid to your Leo counterpart, it'll be hard to hear what you have to say. Or to read your lips. The trick—with illusionary Neptune in your sign, you appear to be full of them—would be to have a puppet mouth your words. But if you're not Dick Cheney and politics isn't your game, then this would be a good time to go on a spiritual or mental health retreat. Yoga camp could restore your energy and redirect your focus, so that, come fall, you can come out fighting.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Reactions from Fish feeling the effects of rebellious Uranus in their sign range from bouncing off the walls to cutting out for parts unknown. A few have already incorporated constructive vibes from Saturn in Cancer and are busy organizing their tools. Don't be surprised if you're taken completely unawares when Uranus gets around to changing your life. Meanwhile, energetic Mars in Pisces is slowing down before turning retrograde on the 29th for the next two months. Fish born in February might be let off the hook until Halloween.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

Time is running out. Because generous Jupiter will leave your Leo house of romance and recreation at the end of August, make the most of the benefits provided to a fellow fire sign. Once the jolly giant enters analytic Virgo, you're likely to become more circumspect and judgmental about the things that give you pleasure (and the people, too). If you're having a rollicking good time, carry on, but if not, then get busy. Need an excuse? Blame indecision or sheer laziness on your Mars ruler drifting through Pisces.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

How much self-indulgence can a serious sensualist experience? How much fun can you have at home? During luxury-loving Leo, Bulls may feel that they have to outdo themselves. They tend to create special occasions to rise to, along with big tabs to pick up along the way. You have about another month's worth of elegant temptations and cockeyed optimism before Jupiter leaves Leo for prudent Virgo. If you can contain your enthusiasm, you won't run up much debt. But if that doesn't work, remind yourself that restrictive Saturn can still curb your income.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

For the rest of July, as your Mercury ruler travels through open-hearted, demonstrative Leo, you'll be in a position to bestow a lot of affection, along with some very nice goodies. Right now, you could also be quite inventive and imaginative, fairly psychic and sensitive to other people's secret desires. What you do with these gifts shouldn't be debatable in the customary Gemini way. Since the opportunities you're about to receive to do this much good aren't going to last, be grateful and get on with the giving.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

Now would be a good time to work on beefing up your finances and dressing up your image. Take advantage of easy opportunities to impress people by showing them the bright, beautiful side of the sometimes reclusive, often elusive Crab. A pleasing appearance and a friendly manner should continue to attract folks until the new moon on the 28th, which is when lovable Venus exits Cancer for Leo. After that, you're left with only capable Saturn in your sign. Respect and admiration are nice, but they rarely warm you cockles or buy you dinner.

EMILY POST IS ROLLING OVER IN HER GRAVE

July is high barbecue season, and nobody grills outside quite like the folks at Rialto, which hosted its annual alfresco dinner in the courtyard outside the restaurant.

Guests at The Bold and the Beautiful, as this year's cookout was called, included the likes of management consultant Eileen Shapiro; attorney-at-large Patrick Troy; outrageous raconteur Laurie Snow; the delightful Monica and Max McNamara; stunning blonde Kristen Baylis; software moguls Gary and Kathy Bechtel; radio personality Neal Robert and his babe-a-licious other half, Julia Cruz; Citizens Bank president Rick Wayne, who showed up a bit on the late side; and scintillating socialites Stephanie Warburg and Ann Gund, who stopped by to say hi on their way to another engagement.

The five-course cookout was paired with wines by charming Czech sommelier Patrick Dubsky, and there was lots of lofty talk along the lines of "This one is very juicy and jammy," and, "It's all peaches and honey, especially in the nose." At one table however, the conversation included the true tale of a Jack Russell terrier that mauled a cockatoo at a Fourth of July picnic; it turned out that the woman who brought the cockatoo to the party was only looking after it for someone who was in jail. A waxing horror story followed, and the dual moral of two tales seemed to be: Don't believe it when they say that having the hair ripped from your nether regions doesn't hurt, and never offer to babysit a prison inmate's pet.

THE FRENCH STILL KNOW HOW TO REVOLT...

History's most notorious prison break was celebrated in Harvard Square when Sandrine's hosted a Bastille Day block party, complete with shouts of "Liberté!" "Egalité!" "Fraternité!" and "I need another drink!"

Hosted by the restaurant's owner and master chef, Raymond Ost, the fete attracted a colorful assortment of Francophiles and fabulous people, among them: Gallic funboy Frédéric Dingemans, art consultant Christophe Perez (who runs whitecubes.org, a Web site devoted to contemporary art); Perez's wife, April (who hails from Nebraska); a pair of Parisian Stephanies—Molinard and Baulac—the effervescent Lionel Gellon; and Alan Basset, who arrived looking extremely French, riding a bicycle while smoking a cigarette.

As couples danced on the sidewalks and people sat at tables in the middle of the street, drinking wine and eating, the lead singer of the band made the following observation: "In New Orleans, it's OK to have a good time and show it. In New York, it's OK to have a good time but it's not OK to show it. And in Boston, it's not OK to have a good time."

Apparently, however, it's allowed in Cambridge at least once a year.

THE SENATOR AND THE SOCIALITES

Anyone wondering whether Hillary Clinton wields as much clout as a senator as she did when she was first lady should see her enter a party full of people who wield plenty of clout of their own. Even among the high and mighty, her arrival draws the attention of the entire room.

Such was the scene at the private reception held at the Charles Hotel by its owner, Clinton intimate Dick Friedman, and his beyond-gorgeous other half, Nancy, to celebrate the publication of the senator's wildly successful memoir, Living History. (Later on, Clinton did a public book signing for the hoi polloi in the hotel's ballroom.)

The VIPs and bigshots mingling in the presidential suite included mega-DNC donors Elaine and Jerry Shuster, first family scion Jim Roosevelt, Clinton cabinet member Robert Reich, gazillionaire divorcée Barbara Lee, Harvard president Larry Summers, Wellesley president Diana Chapman Walsh, secretary of state Bill Galvin, former gubernatorial hopeful Shannon O'Brien, Harvard B-School panjandrum Rosabeth Moss Kanter, glittery party planner Bryan Rafanelli, brunette anchorbabe Liz Brunner, design avatar Denise Korn, and numerous people who wisely accessorized with children. (After all, what's a party for a politician without a few babies to kiss?)

Among the amusing comments overheard:

"When we got off the elevator, I asked one of the Secret Service guys where to go to meet Hillary. He said, 'Take a right and then a left,' and someone behind me said, 'Yeah, but only a moderate left.'"

"I work for Howard Dean, but I elected not to wear my button."

"I see you-know-who didn't buy a book. He's probably waiting to get it cheaper at BJ's."

"It's the perfect beach read: sex, power, and intrigue, and more sex, power and intrigue."

"I haven't read it yet, but I suppose I could lie to her and say, 'Oh, it's fabulous!'"

Then there was the guy who told Clinton that he looked forward to reading her book once he finished the new Harry Potter, to which she responded, "I hope you enjoy mine as much."

Lest it seem that nothing was discussed other than politics and literary matters, there was a triumvirate of socialites in one corner busy comparing their choices of toenail polish.

"I found this one at the supermarket," said the first. "I forget who makes it."

"Mine is called NYPD," said the second.

"I only got this color because of the name," said the third. "It's called Vito, Is My Car Ready?" iB

At the Bastille Day block party, clockwise from right: Alan Basset; Frédéric Dingemans, April and Christophe Perez, and Amelia Stephenson; Guillaume Alchaz, Guillaume Adelmant and Stephanie Baulac.

MATTERS OF THE HEARTH

A topic we can all relate to—where we live and how much we pay to live there—provides the theme for this issue. If you're in pursuit of lower rent or a better deal than the one you have, Dan Schulman's feature story (see page 22) provides some practical advice for achieving those goals, along with anecdotal evidence that now is a good time for renters to negotiate with landlords.

Schulman's article offers tips for deal-seeking buyers too, though if you're waiting for housing prices to drop in Boston, you may be waiting in vain. According to Eric Belsky, executive director of Harvard University's Joint Center for Housing Studies, prices are unlikely to fall significantly, for a number of reasons. Belsky sees indications of slow economic recovery—"not the kind of recovery that would trigger inflation" and drastically raise mortgage interest rates. And in desirable Boston, where, as Belsky says, "it is very difficult to build new housing," supply is not likely to outstrip demand. Yes, interest rates have risen slightly of late, but, he points out, rates are still very low.

Practical advice and your actual paycheck aside, this issue also offers a peek inside some of the area's most expensive homes, all currently on the market and all with multimillion-dollar price tags (see page 28). Julia Child's former home is among them. We can dream, can't we?

CHEERS AND JEERS

Every year I look forward to the IB's Boston's Best issue, which usually stacks up with the other "Best Ofs" somewhere between Boston magazine (predictable) and the Phoenix (excellent).

Who is to blame for your issue's shockingly unimaginative writing? Did you really have to work the word "bubbe" into the reviews of both Kupel's and Rubin's? What about "subterranean" in two consecutive reviews (Café Pamplona and Silvertone)? I think "downstairs" or "underground" would have sufficed. You also use such lame descriptors as "Disney-fied" (Rustic Kitchen) and "Disney-esque" (Troquet).

Your writer(s) also left out the "i" in "mangia" in the Bricco review. Proofreading is cool—and funnily enough, something Veronica Chao mentions three times in her editor's letter.

But—are you still reading?—my biggest beef about your Best issue: Have you heard of Jamaica Plain? Not one JP restaurant was represented! For shame. I mean, everyone knows that Silvertone's mac and cheese is ace, but the same dish at Zon's is superior.

—EMILY DONAHUE
Jamaica Plain

I can accept the fact that no East Boston entities won any of your magazine's Boston's Best awards. After all, these award choices are open to debate and one's personal tastes and preferences. As an East Boston resident, however, I find it insulting and offensive that THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN had the audacity to fail to list an East Boston pub/bar/restaurant in the "Neighborhood Hangouts" pages of its vast Boston's Best edition. Even though the first road sign at the far end of the Callahan Tunnel reads "Route 1A Revere," it would serve the Improper well to remember that Boston's most ethnically diverse neighborhood deserves the courtesy of your attention.

—CHRIS CRONIN
East Boston

SILVERTONE'S MAC AND CHEESE IS ACE, BUT THE SAME DISH AT ZON'S IS SUPERIOR.
—EMILY DONAHUE
JAMAICA PLAIN

As a longtime reader of THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN, I was eagerly awaiting the Best issue and once again I was not let down. I use your issue as a guide to find out what's hot, places to shop and eat, and as always, I love your unique and creative Best categories.

When I read the IMPROPER, I remember all of the reasons why I live in Boston and it gives me good reason to venture out of Charlestown and explore all that this city has to offer.

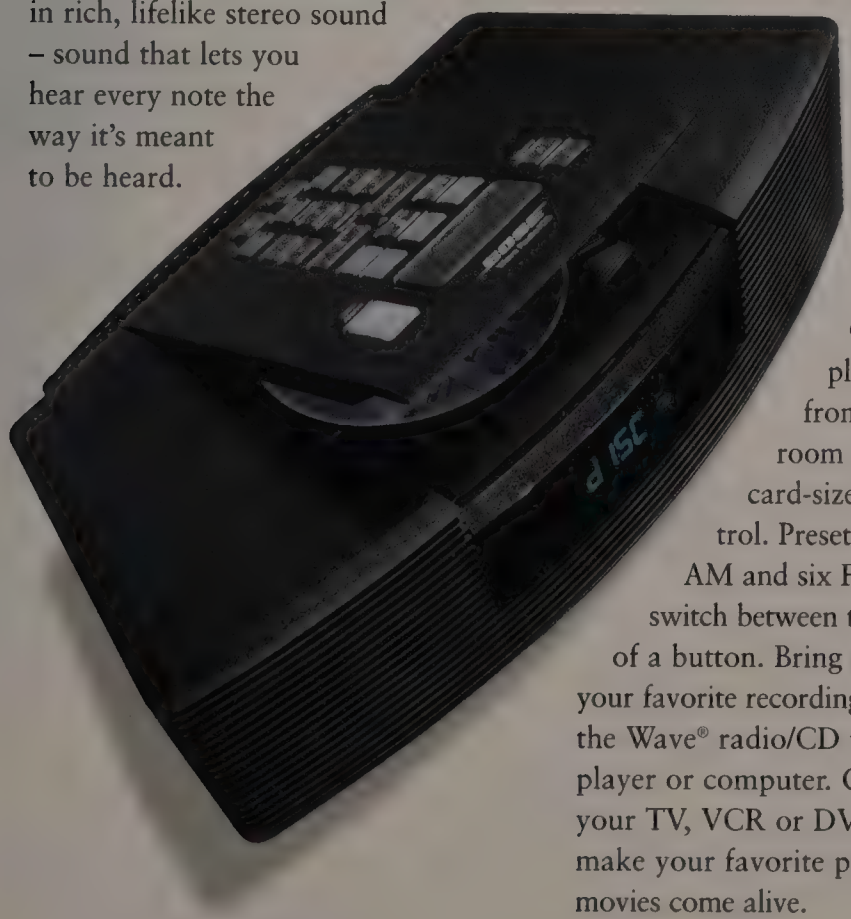
Why you should pay $499 for the Wave® radio/CD.

Obviously, it better not be just another radio. This one isn't. Quite simply, the Bose® Wave® radio gives you sound that's richer, more natural, more lifelike than you've ever heard from a radio. Sound Forbes FYI calls "worth every penny." It's no exaggeration to say you have to hear it to believe it.

Bose sound from a small radio.

The Wave® radio/CD is from Bose, one of the world's leading makers of audio equipment. When we undertook the task of getting Bose quality sound from a small radio, we used our patented acoustic waveguide speaker technology. Just as a flute strengthens a breath of air to fill an entire concert hall, the waveguide produces room-filling sound from a small enclosure.

Touch a button and hear your favorite music come alive in rich, lifelike stereo sound – sound that lets you hear every note the way it's meant to be heard.



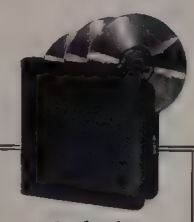
No matter what kind of music you enjoy, the Wave® radio/CD will truly increase your listening pleasure. Consider that Forbes ASAP rated the Wave® radio next to the light bulb and the compact disc on their exclusive list of 15 technology breakthroughs that have changed the world. And yet the Wave® radio/CD measures just 4 3/8"H x 14"W x 8 1/2"D, so it's small enough to fit almost anywhere. You can listen in your bedroom, living room, kitchen or any room. And with your choice of Graphite Gray or Platinum White, the Wave® radio/CD not only fits any room, it fits any décor.

Great sound made easy.

In addition to great sound, we built in an array of easy-to-use features. Operate the CD player or radio from across the room with the credit card-sized remote control. Preset your favorite six AM and six FM stations and switch between them at the touch of a button. Bring great sound to your favorite recordings by connecting the Wave® radio/CD to a cassette player or computer. Connect it to your TV, VCR or DVD player to make your favorite programs and movies come alive.

Call and make 12 interest-free payments.

We don't expect you to take our word for how good the Wave® radio/CD sounds. You really have to hear it to believe it. The Wave® radio/CD is available directly from Bose, the most respected name in sound. Take advantage of our payment plan and make 12 interest-free monthly payments of only $41.59. Call 1-800-836-6754, ext. TB933, to learn more about our 30-day in-home trial and 100% satisfaction guarantee. If you choose to return your system anytime within 30 days, we will refund your purchase price in full – no questions asked. Order now and shipping is free. Plus, you'll get a free Bose CD carrying case. This versatile carrier protects up to 24 of your favorite CDs or DVDs in static-free sleeves.



Order by September 30, 2003 and receive a FREE CD Case.

You've owned a lot of radios – small ones, portable ones. It's time you owned the best-sounding radio – the Bose Wave® radio/CD.

MORE MOHR & MCPHERSON

Loyal patrons were disappointed when import home furnishings store Mohr & McPherson vacated its palatial downtown digs a few years ago. Now some good news: They're back in the Back Bay. But let's start at the beginning—or rather, the end—of the story, when the gorgeous furniture emporium closed its Arlington Street store three years ago. Owner Kevin McPherson moved the store's contents to a 13,000-square-foot warehouse in Cambridge (near his smaller Mohr & McPherson boutique on Concord Avenue), and built up more than $3 million in inventory gathered from around the world.

Fast-forward to our recent discovery of Mohr & McPherson's new showroom on Boylston Street. Much smaller than the vast warehouse, this cozy store highlights some of the company's most exquisite offerings—including furniture, antiques, jewelry, textiles and rugs from such exotic locales as China, Indonesia, India, Japan, Myanmar, Korea and Morocco. "It's quite small, but it offers a good overview of the kinds of things we offer and it captures the feeling of [Mohr & McPherson]," says McPherson. You can get an antique Maduran canopy bed for $2,490, a Manchurian altar table for $990, a turn-of-the-century walnut tea table for $849 or a set of coasters from Peru for $68.

McPherson regularly travels abroad to hand-pick items—like the huge tents and colorful sunbleached rugs he recently brought back from Morocco. "There's a different story behind each object," he says. "Some we designed and had made for us, others are old pieces that have been made into something new—like a door turned into a cabinet." 352 Boylston St., Boston (617-450-0204).—E.H. and J.S.

OH MY, OMEGA

The name Alpha Omega is usually synonymous with watches—fancy, expensive ones. But a look at its new three-floor, 6,000-square-foot store located in Harvard Square offered some surprises. Not only did I see reasonable prices, but the shop carries some of the most beautiful jewelry I've seen in some time—a clean and modern collection. In September, look for a brand new diamond cut called the Tycoon—a cross between an emerald and a princess cut. The store's three floors feature more than a dozen designer boutiques with full collections, a floor of jewelry by designers like Doris Panos, Gregg Ruth and Bulgari, and a service center that caters to your every whim. You can spend anywhere from $20 to $100,000. So if you're walking by with only $100 in your pocket, don't be afraid to stop in. 1380 Mass Ave., Cambridge (617-876-0324).—Samantha House

CANINE COUNSEL

Move over, Ann Landers. There's a new advice columnist in town: Her name is Monica Collins, a.k.a. Dog Lady, and she's the voice of reason to dog owners worldwide. Collins, who writes about television for the Boston Herald, began her canine advice column four years ago as a North End neighborhood newsletter and has since parlayed her woofs of wisdom into a regular column that has appeared in national dog mag The Bark, several local papers and, most recently, www.askdoglady.com, which launched in March. Here, Collins shares with her views on (wo)man's best friend (and some owners).

IB: What's been your most off-the-wall letter?

MC: My weirdest questions have been about people—other people and their dogs. There was a woman who said her boyfriend liked her dog more than her. He took the dog to Easter dinner at his mother's and left her at home. Then there was the woman who went to pick up her Westie at the groomer and insisted the groomer was giving her the wrong dog. She took another dog [the wrong one] home.

IB: What was your favorite column?

MC: I got a letter from a guy in Cambridge who wrote about his rottweiler, Larry, whom he had brought north from Washington D.C. The dog was unruly, sloppy and not nice to office workers, and the man asked if castration would help. I couched the answer by saying the dog must be a Democrat, and that yes, castration would help. It would've helped Bill Clinton. It turned out this column caused a fuss at Harvard because everyone thought it was written about Larry Summers, the president of Harvard.

IB: What makes you a dog expert?

MC: I've certainly become an expert through years of living with a dog and learning about dogs. When it comes down to it, I don't give any medical or health advice. I'm not a vet, and I don't play one on the Internet. People can take it with a grain of salt or take it seriously.

IB: Do you believe in taxidermy after a dog has died?

MC: I'm not like the cat lady of Beacon Hill. Dog Lady seeks to dispel all those myths about loony pet people.

IB: How do you feel about women who carry dogs as accessories, like Paris Hilton?

MC: I think it's terrible. I know a woman whose dog is her accessory. If it gets any walking time it's while the woman is on a cell phone and the dog is scrambling at the end of a leash. I'm definitely not part of the New York culture where the dog goes to lunch at Le Cirque and fits in an Hermès Birkin bag.

IB: Is dog truly man's best friend?

MC: Dog is woman's best friend. But that doesn't preclude other best friends. It should never be your top relationship in life.

IB: How do you feel about cats?

MC: I think cats are cute, but I'm allergic to them.

You can always get tickets to that Bruins-Islanders game, but the only way to ensure you'll be at the FleetCenter, Fenway Park or Gillette Stadium for the the big game is to buy season tickets. With the Patriots Bruins and Celtics seasons right around the corner, we checked out the current cost of true fandom.

The Patriots have the cheapest season tickets—not surprising since they play only eight home games. Unfortunately, the affordability of Pats tickets ($1,040 for two midprice season tickets) means there's a waiting list to get them. Oh well—at least you're not a Bengals fan.

Midprice season tickets for the Bruins or Celtics (including all 41 home games plus two exhibitions) run anywhere from $4,000 to the mid-$5,000 range for two seats, depending on location. Season ticket holders are also guaranteed home playoff tickets and receive other perks like the chance to attend a team practice.

Season tickets for the 81 Red Sox home games cost $10,530 for two loge box seats. Or you and a friend can get behind home plate for $44,550. If that sounds extravagant, consider that two 2003–04 Celtics courtside season tickets go for a cool $60,200, which also includes a dinner at Morton's with the owners and coaching staff. Hope you like steak.—Ezra Dyer

TEA TIME

Never Before Scene...Instead of trying to one-up the already flamboyant South End scene (playground of gay fashionistas, starving artists and all-around hipsters) with a giant dose of esoteric chic, restaurateur Jim Hamelburg and company are taking the road less traveled: mainstream and simple. The former owner of the G Lounge is set to open Joe V's in late August/early September in the space formerly occupied by On the Park. With moderately priced Italian cuisine (pasta, panini and salads), café-style seating and beer, wine and cordials, Joe V's is the antithesis of the G Lounge. "It's going to be a drop-in place for the neighborhood," says Hamelburg. "We're not looking for the crowd who goes from one opening to the next." Looks like it could be the next big antiscene scene. 315 Shawmut Ave., Boston (617-426-0862).

Head Notes...It's a simple law of economics: Let demand surpass supply and watch the profits roll in. We would never accuse our friends at Harpoon of such unabashed capitalism, but it just so happens that their latest endeavor fits that formula perfectly. The Boston-based brewery's Vermont depot launched the Harpoon 100 Barrel Series in June. Each beer in the series is produced in limited quantity (yep—just 100 barrels of each) by a different Harpoon brewer. The series kicked off with Oatmeal Stout, available for a limited time at Martignetti's, Blanchard's, the Burren and Redbones. Look for additional sudsy delights in coming months.

New in Newton...With all the fabulous restaurants in the city, why trek all the way to Newton for Asian cuisine? The answer is simple: Green Tea. Not the beverage, but chef Sunny Wong's new restaurant, which has generated quite a buzz since opening five months ago. The main attraction is Wong's sushi creation called the Matrix, a Hollywood-inspired edi maki roll surrounded by broiled salmon and black and white sauce. Wong's resume includes stints in Hong Kong and at the North End's Billy Tse's, as well as 12 years under the tutelage of Meritage's Daniel Bruce. Stop by for a taste of his sushi, as well as the dim sum and Taiwanese dishes. 24 Elliot St., Newton (617-965-2260).

More Irish...When McCarthy's flew its Boylston coop earlier this year, it left a prime piece of real estate up for grabs. The merrymakers behind such lively pubs as McGann's and, until recently, the Irish Embassy, scooped up the property in June and added another Gaelic haunt to their cache with Lír. Save for a few minor renovations, the interior remains the same, but the Back Bay's latest watering hole is upping the ante with 22 TVs for optimum sports coverage. 903 Boylston St., Boston (617-778-0089).

Word Scramble...If you're looking for a slice of deep-dish at Pizzeria Uno or a vat of chicken marsala at Vinny Testa's, it's too late. Both restaurants are a thing of the past...sort of. In the name of rebranding, both restaurants are now operating under new names. Buca Inc. bought Vinny Testa's early last year and last month unveiled Vinny T's of Boston, complete with a new and improved menu. According to a Vinny T's spokesperson, the name change makes it a little more personal and a little less like "Who is this Vinny Testa guy?" (For the record, it's a made-up name, with no relation to New York Jets football player Vinny Testaverde.) As for the restaurant formerly known as Pizzeria Uno, after 60 years, the company decided that Uno Chicago Grill had a nicer ring to it. Either way, expect the same, if not better, in terms of food and service.

Surf 'n' Turf... The gastronomic geniuses at No. 9 Park are ready to unveil two new pet projects sure to tickle taste buds all over town. Chef/owner Barbara Lynch and her trusty GM Garrett Harker take their culinary prowess to the simpler side for B & G Oysters Ltd., set to open Aug. 21 in the South End digs formerly occupied by Le Gamin. The 38-seat eatery features an oyster and raw bar with a selection of clams, oysters, lobster rolls, chowder and mussels. "It's more of a neighborhood spot," says Harker. "Thoughtful but familiar."

Just two weeks later, the duo plans to open the Butcher Shop just down the street. The focus here is bringing the choice cuts used at No. 9 to the front lines. Jason Bond, Lynch's right-hand man, will run the shop, which also features charcuterie and a panini and wine bar. B & G Oysters Ltd., 550 Tremont St., Boston (617-423-0550); The Butcher Shop, 552 Tremont St., Boston (617-423-4800).—E.H., J.I. and J.S.

THROUGH THE GRAPEVINE

Women: There comes a time in your life when you should be able to distinguish between a cabernet and a Shiraz. That time is now, and Kindra Spector is here to help. The Weston resident parlayed her interest in wine into Wine Sisters USA, a national wine and food self-study organization. Her idea was to create a forum for women and their friends to learn about wine in private groups. Since the official launch of its Web site in June, Wine Sisters' extensive educational materials and resources, including tips on how to host at-home tastings, have been available to chapters nationwide. Start-up advice, food-pairing suggestions and supplemental readings are accessible online. Spector reports that sisterhoods, as she calls them, and brotherhoods have sprung up all over the country, from New York's Upper East Side to Brentwood, Calif. Even our resident master of wine, IMPROPER columnist Sandy Block, has given it his coveted seal of approval. Membership: $100 (for a group) www.winesisters.com —Jessica Iredale

PAYING TO PARK

A very wise IMPROPER staffer once wrote "If hell had a parking lot, it would be Beacon Hill." We're going to go ahead and extend that metaphor to the whole of Boston. Unless you have an incredibly long fuse, enjoy a challenge or simply don't own a car, parking garages are the way to go. Here's a roundup of monthly rates for 24-hour parking at city garages.

* A&C Parking Inc., 210 Columbus Avenue (617-482-4401): $400
* Boston Common Parking Garage, 0 Charles Street (617-954-2034): $310
* Charles Street Garage, 144 Charles Street (617-523-8432): $430
* Danker & Donohue Garage, 341 Newbury Street (617-536-3380): $295
* Government Center Garage, 50 New Sudbury Street (617-227-0385): $28
* Marketplace Center Garage 200 State Street (617-367-4373): $335
* North End Garage, 600 Commercial Street (617-742 6759): $235
* Pilgrim Parking, 99 Summe Street (617-439-9606): $39
* 75 State Street Garage, 75 State Street (617-742-7275) $400

Scenic Route... In-laws visiting again? Where do you take 'em this time? And where do you park the car? Old Town Trolley Tours feels your pain. In an effort to diminish the aggravations of hosting, the trolley tour company is offering free admission for all Massachusetts residents when accompanied by a paying adult. Flash your ID and you've got a free 110-minute ride.

Checks and Balances...Consumer Reports was a trailblazer in terms of watching out for the little guy. Now Boston residents have their own version of the shopper's advocate. Boston Consumers' Checkbook, which launched in early January, rates the best and worst of local service firms. The biannual publication's second issue, released in mid-July, dishes the skinny on local supermarkets, body shops, banks, hardware stores, heating and AC repair services, opticians and physician specialists. A two-year subscription is $30, and subscribers receive access to updates on the Web site, www.checkbook.org.

Designing Women...In a greeting-card market saturated with cliched "another year older" and "this card is all I could afford" messages, two local women have come up with a refreshing alternative. Meredith Noyes and Camille Heidebrecht launched ITgirls, their 64-card line, out of Melrose in May. Each brightly colored, to-the-point card is illustrated with an ITgirl image and a kitschy message. The cutesy cards target women ages 16-44, "or anyone young at heart." Look for the funky cards locally at Copley Flair and at www.itgirlscards.com.

Paper Trail...Paper fiends will be thrilled that Paper Source, which sells everything from hand-crafted stationery to photo albums and custom invitations, is set to open its third and largest local location next to Shreve, Crump & Low in mid-September. The Chicago-based paper purveyors operate two outposts in Brookline and Cambridge, but the bigge (4,800 square feet) and possibly the bes will reside on Boylston Street. Paper-making, book-binding, printmaking and decoupage workshops will be offered a the new store. 338 Boylston St., Bosto (617-536-3444).—E.H., J.I. and J.S.

Saks Fifth Avenue's "Saks in the City" Preview Party was held July 23 at Saks Fifth Avenue in the Prudential Center. More than 1,000 fashionistas gathered to shop till they dropped to benefit four Boston organizations: the AIDS Action Committee, the American Heart Association, the Institute of Contemporary Art (ICA) and the Wang Center for the Performing Arts. Guests scooped up bargains collected from Saks stores across the country while sipping martinis served by Tonic. All organizations received 2 percent of sales designated for them. The American Heart Association won the grand prize, which is a benefit fashion show this fall underwritten by Saks Fifth Avenue.

PARKING SPAZ

You've heard of road rage. Now meet the new scourge of the streets: parking pique

People in this city go absolutely mental over parking spaces. As car owners can attest, at any given time there are a total of about five open spots in the entire Greater Boston area, and all of them have a car backing in at the moment. I have, on many occasions, nearly gone on a Grand Theft Auto–style rampage after the car in front of me pulled into the last available resident-parking spot. I have wished terrible things upon you, fellow drivers, and I'm sorry if any of you actually contracted foot-and-mouth disease.

But even though I've blued the air with disturbingly creative profanity in frustration over parking spaces lost, I've never actually had an altercation over a spot. Until now.

I was driving to work, which I don't usually do, but I wanted my car available for a quick Friday-afternoon getaway. Now, there are usually plenty of meter spots in the vicinity of Improper Towers, so I wasn't worried about finding a space. In fact, I was upping the ante—I was looking for a free, nonmeter space. And while driving across the Mass. Turnpike overpass on Berkeley Street, I found one. I backed in and switched off the ignition.

At just about this time, a Jetta diesel that had been furiously reversing up the street stopped, and a red-faced gentleman in a pastel Polo shirt jumped out and stormed over to my window. "This is my space! Get the f--k out of this f--king space right now!" he screamed.

This was indeed a conundrum, because clearly it was not his space. Not only did this space lack a sign in front of it reading "Reserved for Entitled Pricks," there was also the matter of my car being in it. I double-checked and affirmed that I had not parked atop the roof of another car, so therefore the space must have been vacant when I took it. My old physics teacher would have been proud.

I am a reasonable person, and if I really had committed a parking sin I might have conceded the point and driven away. However, the space race hadn't even been close. He was pulling off Cortes Street a good distance ahead as I'd been pulling into the spot, which seemed a pretty weak basis for his claims of ownership. I was in the right, but when faced with such a confrontation, one must size up one's adversary and make a judgment call. If the space-claimer is six-foot-five, driving a 1975 Camaro Z-28 with bullet holes in the mud flaps, and has a tattoo of a teardrop under his left eye, perhaps it's smart to cede the space. But when your adversary is wearing a pastel Ralph Lauren shirt and driving a Jetta, you can safely assume you're not dealing with Tony Soprano.

"I'm not moving," I informed him. "It's the principle of it."

"Move this f--king car right now!" he shrieked back at me. "I saw this space first!" Apparently, the kind of guy who jumps out of his car and demands your parking space is also the kind of guy who doesn't take no for an answer.

"Who says you saw it first?" I asked the Conquistador of Cortes Street. Reverting to fourth-grade debate techniques, I added, "I saw it first." I then gestured directly across the street to an open meter and told my new friend that a fine space awaited him right there. "But that's at a meter and this is free!" he screeched. Well, cry me a river. Casual Friday is off to quite a terrible start, isn't it Mr. Pastel Polo?

I told him that he'd have to pay the grand sum of two bucks for a meter. He just stood there staring, as if he was contemplating dragging me from my car and beating me which he undoubtedly was. I stared back envisioning what life must be like for this guy's family and coworkers. I can see him at home, punching the microwave when his popcorn burns, cheating against his kids at Go Fish and bragging to the neighbors about the awesome mileage his Jetta diesel gets. And if he acts like this much of a dill-nut over two dollars in quarters, he's probably not much fun on a trip to Foxwoods, either.

Eventually he gave up and stormed away with a shouted threat that he would some day break my mirrors off. As soon as he got back into his car, I pulled out onto Berkeley Street behind him and another car quickly took the much-debated space. It felt good giving that new person the nice excitement you get when you find a free spot. ■

Soroff ON

FREE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

As host of Black Entertainment Television's 106 & Park, the top-rated music video countdown show on cable television, co-host Free has become one of the network's most popular stars and a force to be reckoned with in the world of R&B, rap and hip-hop. The show, which airs Monday through Friday at 11:30 am and 6 pm, reaches 700,000 viewers daily and attracts guests like Will Smith, Jennifer Lopez, Ja Rule, P. Diddy and Jay-Z, as well as helping to launch the careers of stars like Alicia Keys, India.Arie and Lil' Bow Wow. Born Marie Wright, Free was raised in Roxbury and Dorchester and went to Northeastern University. She left a job in the computer industry to launch a recording career and was eventually signed to a record deal with Wyclef Jean but left to pursue other opportunities. At a record release party for Busta Rhymes, she bumped into BET's vice president of music programming, whom she had known while interning at Boston's WILD-AM. Despite having no previous TV experience, she was hired to do the show alongside male cohost AJ. In addition to her TV career, Free recently completed work on her own album, due out in September. She lives in New York.

JS: OK, so you're the flyest girl on BET…
F: Thank you!
JS: But your co-host, AJ—he's a pain in the ass.
F: Big pain! We love it!
JS: I just wanna see you reach out and slap him. Don't you ever feel like smacking him?
F: I do, but I can't slap him. I get to hit him with pillows, though.
JS: Your hair's different practically every day. How much time do you spend on it?
F: Not much.
JS: Liar.
F: No! We're creative, and we're fast. I don't like to sit still, so we just move through it. I've always changed my hair. Before the show started, I've always gotten bored after a few days or a week or two with the same hairstyle, and my best friend [Tracy Washington, from Boston] is a hairdresser. She works at BET. So it makes sense to have fun.
JS: How about AJ's hair? Let's discuss that for a minute…
F: Well, he's got corn-rows on the side and dreads on the top of his head.
JS: Yeah. What's that about?
F: He's had his hair like that for years now.
JS: That's no excuse.
F: It works for his head. You couldn't wear your hair like that, but AJ can.
JS: Alright, I admit it. I'm jealous of AJ.
F: You should be. He's good with the ladies.
JS: Whatever. So who'd win in a catfight, Missy Elliott or Lil' Kim?
F: [Laughs.] Oh golly. That's a draw.
JS: Female hip-hop star who lives up to her hoochie-mama image?
F: See, the image is one thing, but when you meet people, a lot of them are completely different. So nobody's been a hoochie-mama in front of me. I haven't seen the hoochie-mama-ness.
JS: OK, biggest diva? Whitney? Mariah?
F: [Laughs.] Ummm…no. I gotta pass on that one.
JS: Biggest gentleman in rap?

IMAGE IS ONE THING, BUT WHEN YOU MEET [HIP-HOP STARS], A LOT OF THEM ARE COMPLETELY DIFFERENT... I HAVEN'T SEEN THE HOOCHIE-MAMA-NESS.

F: All of 'em, but let's see…Mos Def… Nelly's cool.
JS: Have you ever seen him take his clothes off, cause it was gettin' hot in here?
F: No. Onstage, he does it all the time. But not in private.
JS: One rapper you'd never date?
F: Oh, God! Why are you asking me these questions? Hmmm. Never say never.
JS: OK, rapper you most want to date?
F: Damn! Nobody comes to mind right now, but when somebody does, I'm gonna call you first.
JS: Has MTV's Total Request Live started to follow your lead?
F: I have no idea, because when they're on, I'm getting ready for my show, so I don't get to see it.
JS: Carson Daly: Thumbs up? Thumbs down?
F: He's good at what he does. Hey, he's still doin' it.
JS: What if MTV offered you his job?
F: I'm happy at BET. I love my audience, what I do and where I work.
JS: Most expensive indulgence since you became a big TV star?
F: My bed. I bought a really expensive bed. It's gorgeous. It's wood. It's very hard, and I have proof, because I have bruises all over my body from where I keep fallin' on it. I don't know who designed it. I know the store where I got it, but I'm not gonna tell you that, because then everyone will have my bed. And it's my freakin' bed.
JS: How about bling-bling? Platinum chains? Diamond rings that spell out your name?
F: None. I haven't dipped into that yet.
JS: Who answers all your fan mail?
F: My assistant will open the mail and separate it by different ages and types of letters, and I'll go through some. Sometimes I'll get online and e-mail some people back.
JS: So who are your biggest fans?
F: How would I know? I'm on the other side of the camera! I get older people in their 50s, young kids....It seems like everybody watches it.
JS: What about white viewers, and what do you think of white suburban kids who are wanna-be rappers?
F: I don't differentiate between them anymore. It's all one to me now.
JS: So hip-hop has nothing to do with skin color?
F: I hope not. I think it's just love of music is what brings people together.
JS: When you first started on the show, you'd never done TV and had no idea what you were doing. What was that like?
F: They said, "That's a camera. And when we say, 'Cut,' you cut. And when we say 'Five-four-three-two-one,' that means go. And that's a microphone." It was the basics. Then I learned about concentrating, taking your craft seriously and researching your guests before they come on, so you can have a great interview, which is our goal.
JS: So when does your own album come out?
F: Late summer. Early September.
JS: Tell me about it.
F: Wow. The music is coming out great. People are asking, "Are you rapping; are you singing?" I always just say, "I'm expressing myself." Just talking about life and some things I've seen, stuff I've been through. There's a lot of hip-hop with the beats. There's a lot of live instruments.
JS: Thing you miss most about Boston?
F: My family. Being able to be with them every day. And Ali's Roti on Blue Hill Avenue. [Laughs.] It's a West Indian Jamaican restaurant. I gotta go there every time I come home. And spring and summertime. It's so pretty.
JS: What's the rap and hip-hop scene like here?
F: There's a lot goin' on there. In fact, we're thinking about doing a talent show up there. That's what I want to do as soon as my album is finished. People are rhyming. Every time I come home, everywhere I'm at, there's a lot goin' on.
JS: Will J.Lo and Ben actually get married?
F: Yes. [Laughs.] You gotta believe!
JS: Will you be in the wedding?
F: [Laughs.] I don't know them that well!
JS: Well, I'm voting for you as one of her bridesmaids.
F: I'd love it! I would do it. I would hold her gown.
JS: Last question. Will you give me a little shout-out on the show?
F: I will. You and all of Boston.

The Real (Estate)

The bargain hunter's guide to finding houses and apartments in Boston

For most Bostonians, it's no surprise when the city routinely turns up near the top of U.S. cost-of-living surveys. From the bone-chilling cost of utilities to the sobering tab for a night on the town, we have grown accustomed to paying top dollar to live here. Most daunting of all, of course, is the price tag of real estate. While many renters and home buyers have flocked to the suburbs in search of better deals, diehard urbanites have stuck around, only to watch sky-high prices rise even higher.

According to the Boston Department of Neighborhood Development, the average price of a single-family home in neighborhoods from South Boston to the South End nearly doubled between 1998 and 2002. Average rents, meanwhile, have followed a similar trend: Whereas eight years ago a modest two-bedroom rental in Boston proper fetched between $850 and $1,000, at this time last year a "cozy" (read: small), "garden level" (read: basement) two-bedroom nook in the Fens was a bargain at $1,600.

How high rents and prices will go is anyone's guess, but on the rental side at least, there is some sign of relief. Some landlords are renewing their leases without raising rents—a significant departure from the past decade when monthly rent could be upped $50, $100, $200 each year. On the sales side, though mortgage interest rates, which have been hovering at Eisenhower-era lows for most of the year, rose incrementally in the final weeks of July, they remain appealing. Able to borrow more capital at a lower rate of return, many home buyers have found previously unattainable properties are now within their grasp.

Whether or not the soaring real estate market, which took off during the mid-1990s, is beginning to plateau, a little savvy can go a long way in finding the right housing at the right price. With that in mind, we set out to find useful advice—including how and where to look—to help you get the best digs for your dollar.

Kate Pieczarka and her boyfriend, Mike Keohane, negotiated and paid only half the broker's fee for their Somerville apartment.

THE NEW DEAL

Not long ago, the perception was that you'd better grab something no matter how much it cost," says broker Thomas O'Connor of Prudential Prime Properties, headquartered in Jamaica Plain. Low vacancy rates and high demand for rentals infused the market with a dog-eat-dog urgency. "Now prices have gone down a bit, and things sit on the market longer. The rental market is actually kind of soft now."

Michael Albano, vice president of Boston Real Estate Group in the Back Bay, says that the rental market has ebbed as a result of current trends in the sales market, among them low interest rates. "Young professionals have been flooding the sales market, trying to get out of the rental trap and get into some kind of a property to take advantage of these low interest rates. That has loosened up the rental market a lot," he says. Since mortgage rates have begun to rebound of late, one would expect home sales to sag as a result. Not so, says Albano. "In the short term, it's having the opposite effect," Albano says. "People are worried that rates are going to continue to go up. They want to lock in now."

Until recently, most attempts to negotiate rent or rental fees with brokers would have gotten you, at best, a sympathetic grin. With no shortage of prospective tenants (some even overbidding to seal the deal), landlords and brokers did not have to entertain lowball offers. But now renters are well positioned to play hardball, say many brokers. Everything's negotiable, from rents and fees to no-pet policies. "This year, renters are almost like buyers; they are looking at everything, and then they are coming in with an offer," says realtor Matthew Hayward of ERA CityState Real Estate on Beacon Hill. "Because the supply is exceeding the demand, tenants are in more of a position to negotiate a deal."

Kate Pieczarka and her boyfriend, Mike Keohane, both 26 and recent law school grads, began looking for their first apartment together in early May. Saddled with considerable school loans, the pair set out to find a two-bedroom rental for under $1,350, a tall order in most Boston-area neighborhoods. After trying the no-fee approach and viewing a succession of squalid rentals, Pieczarka and Keohane accompanied their broker to a well-maintained five-room apartment in a two-family home a few blocks from Teele Square in Somerville. In addition to two spacious bedrooms, a sunny living room and an eat-in kitchen, the apartment included a rare find in Boston-area housing: a dining room. The price: $1,300 per month.

"Our mouths were hanging open. We loved it," says Pieczarka. "Of course the broker pressured us to snatch it right then, but it was a full fee." That's when her law-school training kicked in. "I told the broker, 'I'm not willing to discuss this if it's full fee,'" Pieczarka says. They struck a deal when their broker persuaded the landlord to pick up half the fee.

A LITTLE HELP FROM THE WEB

For bargain hunters looking to gain an edge over the competition, a little cyber savvy goes a long way. As opposed to traditional print listings, Web sites featuring apartments and houses are updated throughout the day, which gives online seekers a critical advantage in timing.

Based on the sheer volume and quality of its listings, Craigslist.org is the best place for apartment hunters to begin their search. Founded in San Francisco in 1995 by software programmer Craig Newmark, Craigslist drew a fervent following in that city; the Boston-based Craigslist, launched in 2000, has become an equally valued resource in this area. Though it was once Boston's best kept secret for apartment hunters, word has spread about Craigslist, which isn't necessarily a bad thing. True, there's more competition for listings. But the growing audience in turn inspires more brokers, landlords and home owners to post available properties. While the site also offers a section devoted to properties for sale in the Greater Boston area (usually posting about 100 new listings per week), it's far more useful for renters, particularly those looking to eliminate the dreaded realtor's fee. On average, Craigslist posts between 150 and 300 new no-fee apartment listings daily that are priced to fit a range of lifestyles—everything from a luxury waterfront three-bedroom in the North End ($4,500) to a no-frills studio in Brighton ($800). Some listings even include digital photos.

Another worthwhile site devoted to apartments in the Boston area is Dwellings.com. What Dwellings lacks in listings (there were only about 50 the last time we checked) it makes up for in other areas, namely a database—including phone numbers and Web links—of more than 60 apartment complexes and management companies that rent directly to tenants.

For home buyers, the Multiple Listing Service (MLS)—a searchable database of sale properties shared and updated by numerous agencies—can be a valuable tool. Accessible online with free registration through several Boston real estate firms, including ERA Boston Real Estate Group (Bostonrealestate.net) and Coldwell Banker (Newenglandmoves.com), among others, the MLS allows home buyers to search listings using a range of criteria, from size and price to design features. From there, properties can be compared with other homes in the same neighborhood.

RESOURCEFUL MOVES

You may know where to look and how to haggle, but finding the most elusive bargains takes a mixture of dumb luck, dogged determination, old-fashioned ingenuity and, at times, a bit of compromise. Recently some Bostonians have taken the phrase "thinking outside the box" quite literally—avoiding pricey, shoebox-like apartments.

When Cate and Tom Karlhuber moved to town several years ago, they sought an affordable rental near Harvard University, where Tom would be going to graduate school. Call it beginner's luck: Through Harvard's off-campus housing service, they found a large one-bedroom close to Harvard Square for $800 per month, including utilities, an unbeatable price even at that time. "It was a unique living situation," Cate, now 28, says. The couple's apartment was located on the third floor of an old Victorian that was owned and occupied by an elderly couple. "We had no separate entrance. We entered through the main foyer of this couple's home and walked up two flights of stairs by their bedrooms and through their living quarters. There was no s te door even upstairs. We lived for three years on the trust that neither of us would rude uninvited. It worked out very well."

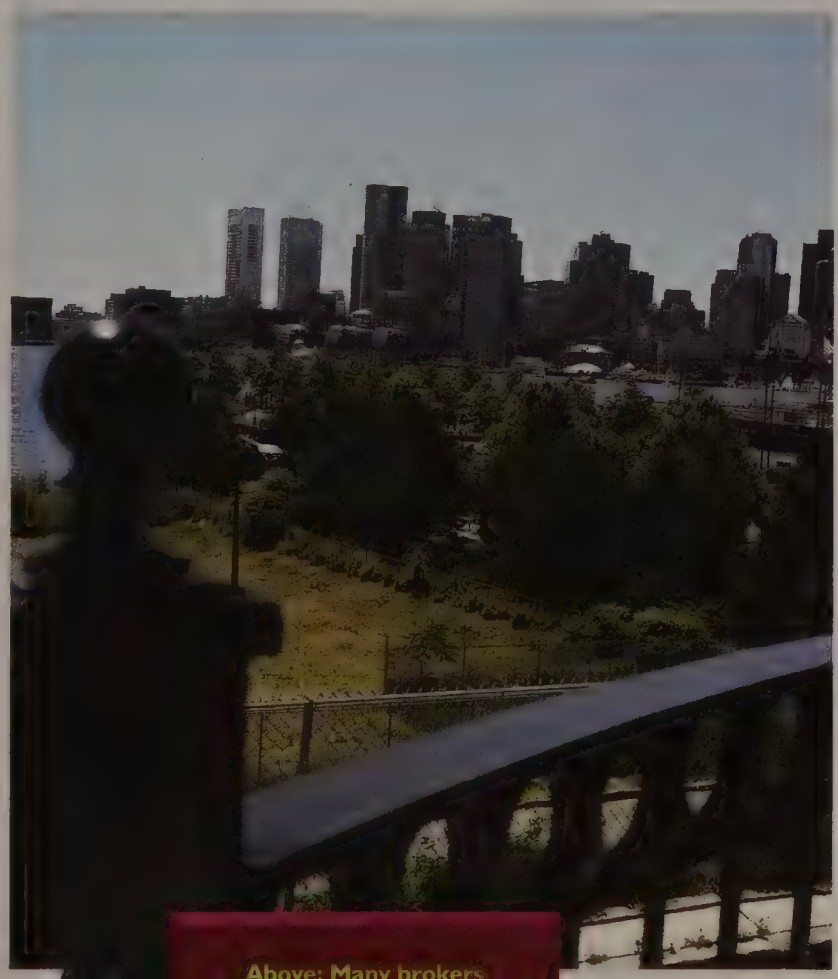
Indeed, the Karlhubers' deal was a rare find, but similar accommodations are occanally listed through college off-campus housing offices; some are publicly accessible line (Emerson College, Tufts University), others are available only to affiliates of the lege (Boston University, Boston College, MIT and Harvard), alums included.

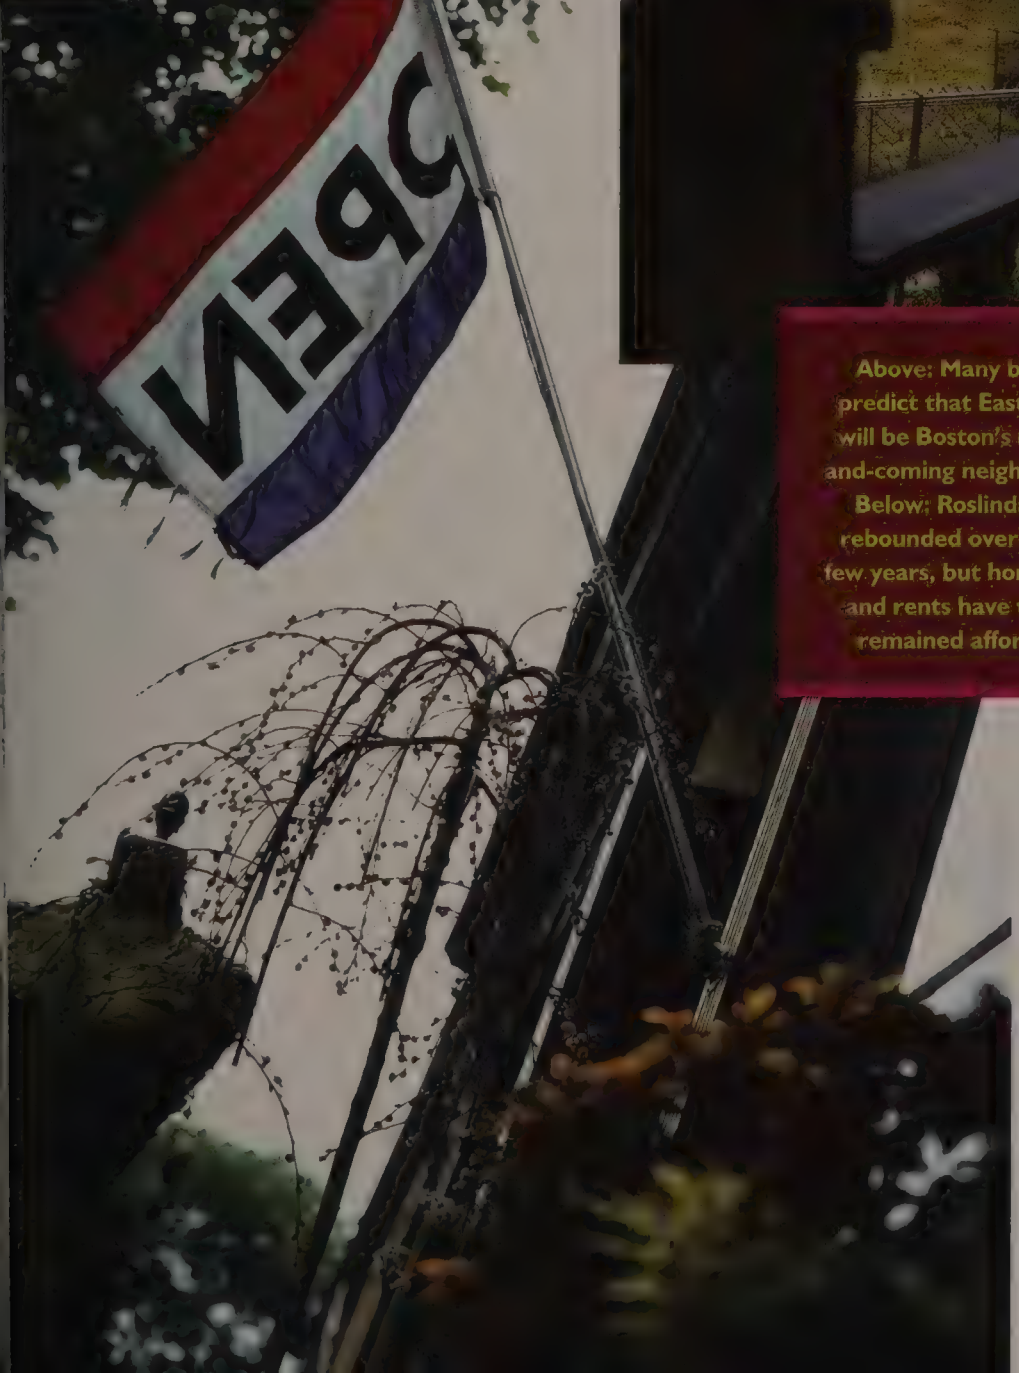
Twenty-six-year-old Daniel Karp and his roommate, Michael Clavadetscher, nd their current digs the newfangled way, using Craigslist. After months of rching for the perfect two-bedroom this spring, they came upon a deal they uldn't pass up: a no-fee, 1,400-square-foot loft in the South End for $1,600 per nth. The apartment had only one drawback: The bedrooms, constructed by the or tenant, consisted of makeshift plywood partitions that afforded little privacy. nvinced that he and his roommate had the know-how to build two new bedms, Karp approached the landlord with a blueprint. "The place had lots of potial," Karp says. The landlord agreed to foot the bill for building materials and ered them access to the apartment two weeks be- e the start of their lease on June 15. Two months, eral inches of sawdust and untold trips to the me Depot later, construction on the loft is near mpletion. "I haven't really been able to relax here —put my feet up and have a cold beer," Karp says. e're almost there, though."

UNTAPPED TERRAIN

s more and more "bargain neighborhoods" become settled and gentrified around Boston—Central uare in Cambridge is just one recent example—it's beming harder to find the hidden gems where the cost of l estate remains below the city standard. But, brokers there are still unspoiled frontiers worth checking out. For years many brokers have predicted that East ston would become the area's next up-and-coming neighborhood, while others maintained that its proximity to Logan Airport—with its accompanying noise and traffic—coupled with its somewhat out-of-the-way location, would make "Eastie" unattractive to many renters and home buyers. What was once Eastie's "Achilles' heel," as broker Thomas O'Connor puts it, is now being remedied with the completion of the Big Dig. "With the new Liberty Tunnel open, you'd be amazed at how quickly you can get there. It's remarkable. It cuts the drive time to and from Boston down by 70 percent. People don't know that yet. Because of that, the real estate market's still a little bit depressed over there," says O'Connor.

According to the latest figures from the Boston Department of Neighborhood Development, released in February, rents and sale prices in East Boston are the lowest in the city: on average $1,200 per month for a two-bedroom apartment and $184,000 for a single-family home. Don't expect prices to remain so affordable for long, though. With astounding views of the Boston skyline and more than $20 million in funding allocated to beautify the area with 42 acres of parkland in the years to come (as part of the Central Artery/Tunnel project), this neighborhood is bound to boom.





Above: Many brokers predict that East Boston will be Boston's next up-and-coming neighborhood. Below: Roslindale has rebounded over the last few years, but home prices and rents have thus far remained affordable.

While East Boston's market has yet to blossom, Roslindale, located at the tail end of Jamaica Plain, is in the early stages of a real estate renaissance, according to Liz Kedzierski, co-owner of South End Realty Group. "Even the aesthetic is changing," Kedzierski notes. "Now people are repainting their Victorians, porches are back in use, lawns are well groomed." And best of all, rental and sale properties are still at the low end of the spectrum; expect to pay about $1,200 to $1,400 per month for a two-bedroom apartment and roughly $350,000 for a single-family home. Roslindale's downtown business district, once stagnant, has been revived over the past few years with the addition of new shops, restaurants and a supermarket. Even with a commuter rail stop located downtown and the Orange Line a short bus ride away, some might be concerned that the neighborhood is still hard to reach from downtown Boston. Dan Tebo, 24, who along with his roommates has rented a sprawling four-bedroom ($2,100 per month) in Roslindale for the past two years, counters, "Why would you want to leave? Everything you need is right here."

For those who don't want to stray too far from downtown Boston but wouldn't mind escaping costly downtown apartments, East Cambridge is another option—that is, if the sight of vinyl siding doesn't bother you. Charismatically scruffy with a distinct old-world vibe, the neighborhood's main drag, Cambridge Street, boasts a couple of fresh-fish markets, several bars, a bunch of restaurants serving ethnic cuisine and, of course, the Mayflower Poultry Co.'s infamous "Live Poultry Fresh Killed" sign. Given its location—a short T ride to downtown on either the Green (Lechmere) or Red (Kendall) line—and the fact that the price of real estate in nearby neighborhoods in Cambridge and Somerville has swelled to rival parts of Boston, it's remarkable that housing in East Cambridge remains a bargain. According to Nathan Kling, a rental agent at Skyline Realty in Central Square, in this part of Cambridge, a quality two-bedroom rents for about $1,500 per month, and single-family homes are priced between $350,000 and $400,000.

GOOD BUY

Unlike renting, which always feels transitory, owning property calls to mind a sense of rootedness, accomplishment and peace of mind. Unfortunately, the romantic notion of home ownership loses some of its luster in the face of Boston's formidable property costs. In the first quarter of 2003, the average selling price of a single-family home in the Greater Boston area was $508,354, according to the Massachusetts Association of Realtors—an increase of 15 percent since the same time last year. While the rental market is beginning to soften, realtors maintain that sales are still surging. So, how can wanna-be home owners find bargain properties to indulge that homesteading instinct? One option is real estate auctions.

The IMPROPER's Julie Suratt recently had her first auction experience when a builder, who'd been hired to case the rental condo she shares with her husband, informed her that her pad was up for bid. A simple Google search confirmed the builder's story: Their apartment was listed among properties seized by the IRS for nonpayment of federal taxes on the U.S. Department of Treasury's Web site (www.ustreas.gov/auctions/irs/real1.html) and was up for auction. The minimum bid: about $68,000. Like many seized properties, Suratt's apartment was listed as a drive-by auction, meaning that interested parties could view the property only from the outside before logging a bid.

While IRS property auctions in the Boston area are rare—at last count the Treasury Department's Web site listed 21 properties, none of those in Massachusetts—bank foreclosure auctions are not. Such listings are posted daily in the classified sections of the Boston Globe and the Herald and include the date and time of the auction, the basic specs of the property and the deposit required to secure a winning bid. The rest is up to you.

"Do your homework. Go to the Registry of Deeds," recommends auctioneer Marianne Sullivan of Paul E. Saperstein Co. Inc., a Holbrook-based firm that handles property auctions in New England. Since the interior of most foreclosed properties cannot be viewed prior to sale, auctiongoers must rely on information archived at the local Registry of Deeds, including detailed floor plans, zoning restrictions and the amount of back taxes owed, if any, that the new owner may have to pay. In addition to thorough research, buying at auction requires a degree of restraint, especially for inexperienced home buyers. "It's easy to get caught up in the furor of it all and end up overbidding," cautions broker Ted Pietras of Gibson Domain | Domain in the South End. But with a bit of business savvy and a lot of legwork, buyers can sweep up foreclosed properties at prices well below market value.

Two years ago, when 34-year-old Brooke Wotton returned to Boston from Saudi Arabia, she at first considered settling in a downtown rental. Then she thought better of it. "First, last, security deposit and realtor's fee—you almost have a down payment right there," she says. Instead of renting, she hit the auction circuit. After two weeks of scouring newspapers, researching properties and attending local auctions, her efforts were rewarded. She was the highest bidder for an 826-square-foot Medford loft, located in what was once a high school. She paid $152,500 for a property then valued at $187,000. Wotton, who is now a real estate broker herself, recently put her apartment back on the market and quickly sold it for $253,500.

Wotton's success, and the creative efforts of all the buyers and renters mentioned in this story, can serve as inspiration for anyone buying, renting or still mulling over the options in high-priced Boston. The deals are out there, if you just know where to look. IB

EXPERT ADVICE

When pressed for bargain-hunting tips, brokers respond in wholly differen ways. Some focus on developing neighborhoods and seasonal trends, whi others stress the power of negotiating a lease. (There are others, of course who merely laugh for a disconcerting length of time, but we won't let them discourag us.) Here, the experts sound off with further advice for renters and home buyers.

FOR RENTERS

Spread the word that you're looking. "Start with your circle of friends and family. Put the word out that you're looking for an apartment. Somebody might know somebody who knows somebody. Use the grapevine."

—Thomas O'Connor, Prudential Prime Properties

Put your best foot forward. "Be organized and have strong references. Anything you can do to prove to a landlord that you've been a positive tenant in the past has a strong value. Presentation is everything, and that's when negotiations come into play."

And use the power of negotiation. "Try to find something with heat and hot water included. These things add up. If you're paying for heat, [check] the condition of the windows. Lower floors are much more costly to heat than upper floors. You can also check with the electric or gas company to find out what the average ran for the prior tenant."

—Liz Kedzierski, South End Realty Group

Plan to look in the off-season. "A September 1st move-in date is the least negotiable. Look during the dead of winter. The first day it snows more than a foot, that's when you should be out looking. It's nasty, wet and miserable, but that's when no one else is looking."

—Will Fastow, A.E. Rondeau Real Estate

Remember that money talks. "Bring your checkbook. Nobody negotiates until the money's down. The best way to do it is to name your price, submit your offer and see what happens."

—Nathan Kling, Skyline Realty

FOR BUYERS

Remember the value of good timing. "Brokers probably don't want me talking about this, but the magic moment to buy is between Thanksgiving and New Year's. That's the worst time of year to sell a house. But some people have no choice. If somebody needs to sell during that time of year, they are more willing to cut a deal.

And look for yard sales. "Why are they having a yard sale? They might be looking to move. They might have to move o short notice. Let's say the people havin the yard sale aren't moving, there are s plenty of neighbors there. Ask around Don't be shy."

—Thomas O'Conno Prudential Prime Properties

Look for fellow fixer-uppers. "If you' willing to put some sweat equity int something, look for neighborhood where people are starting to paint the homes, where there's a sense of cleanl ness and pride in the location. If you c find something that needs some swea equity, that's always your best bet."

—Liz Kedzierski South End Realty Grou

Remember the art of compromis "Make a prioritized list of the types amenities and features you want you home to have, and decide which fea tures are going to be negotiable for you Have as flexible a position as possible Based upon that, choose the neighbor hood where you want to live—no solely based upon the aesthetics of th neighborhood. In neighborhoods li Back Bay and the South End, you' paying a premium to live there. That not necessarily a price that you have t pay if you can find something just as nic that you'd be happy with in a less gentr fied neighborhood."

—Will Fastow A.E. Rondeau Real Estat

Hedge your investment. "One thing som people are doing is buying multifamil homes, living in a part of the home an renting out the other part, or condo-co verting it. You can use the fact that you c borrow more money at a lower rate t buy more property than you need, to b income property. There you're not on hedging your investment but offsetting th fact that you're paying somewhat of a pre mium in this market and you may s prices come down in the short run."

—Michael Albano Boston Real Estate Gro

Create a bargain. "Often bargains are n found but created. Say you find a pla with ugly shag carpeting. Putting in har wood floors will cost you $4,00 $5,000, but when it comes time to s your home could be worth $10,000 $15,000 more."

—Bill Sco Coldwell Ban

For many of us, seeing a "for sale" sign outside a beautiful seven-figure home can result in a case of wistfulness that stops us in our tracks. "What would it be like to live here?" we ask, as we try to sneak a peek inside. Maybe we get a glimpse of dark wood paneling, velvet curtains, a painting or a chandelier. Maybe we see the lucky person who lives there, casually sitting on the sofa with the Sunday paper. Maybe we keep walking, heading for the nearest convenience store to buy a scratch ticket.

To remove some of the mystery behind the highest imaginable standards of living, we ventured inside a handful of multimillion-dollar homes tucked into neighborhoods all around Boston, from brownstone-lined streets to windswept wharfs. These magnificent residences, all currently on the market, range from the 1889 Colonial/Classical Revival house in Cambridge where Julia Child lived (and cooked) for many years to a new six-bedroom penthouse in the South End that offers a 360-degree view of Boston's skyline. Step inside—you might find the house of your dreams.

200 BEACON STREET, PENTHOUSE UNIT #5, BACK BAY: $5.7 MILLION

Contact: Lili Banani, Coldwell Banker Itzkan & Marchiel, Back Bay; 617-796-7521

From the outside, this austere brownstone, built in 1862 by John Rollins, offers few clues to the palatial dimensions inside. Newbury Street interior designer Anthony Catalfano embellished the building's 3400-square-foot triplex penthouse unit between 2000 and 2001. "I was going for an international style or old-world effect that could be in New York, Paris or Boston," he says. Custom-milled crown moldings and Brazilian cherry-wood floors are among the many eye-catchers in this unit, which also has broad views of the Charles River.

At the central parlor level, the elevator door opens onto a paneled foyer with a brass ring knocker, allowing visitors to announce their arrival with Park Avenue pomp. The light-filled living room is dressed for grand-scale entertaining with muted green wallpaper, a green marble fireplace, a silver-leaf tea-paper ceiling, and a wrought-iron Juliet balcony that provides a panoramic Cambridge-on-the-Charles view. Roman Doric columns flank the entrance to the dining room, which mirrors the color of the living room's balcony, ceiling and walls. Images of birds and trees, modeled after 18th-century hand-painted Hong Kong wallpaper, cover the walls; together with the ceiling, they recall the days when many Bostonians built their fortunes through trade with China.

Mirrored double French doors, reflecting the river view, open to the gourmet kitchen with its limestone floors, tiger-maple cabinetry and green granite island and counters. Appliances include a five-burner cooktop electric stove, a Sub-Zero refrigerator with two pull-out freezers, and a double dishwasher (the latter two neatly concealed in the woodwork). A kitchen-to-foyer corridor is devoted to liquid refreshments—here you'll find a Sub-Zero wine cooler and two pull-out beverage fridges.

A French neocolonial brass/iron staircase with a domed skylight leads to the upper and lower levels. The lower-level library/family room level has its original arched marble mantel with a female bust keystone and cast-iron coal grate. With its crimson walls, striped carpeting, bamboo shades and faux bamboo ceiling, it has the aura of the British West Indies. The adjacent guest room has tassel-bordered window draperies, an original Doric-columned mantel, and silhouette illustrations covering its walls.

The upper-level master bedroom, whose walls are covered with equestrian scenes, overlooks the lagoon and the Charles and offers a view of Harvard's towers across the river. The master bath has a lime-stone floor, a water-jet tub and a two-head shower. A second guest room is playfully painted with Boston scenery—to see the real thing, head to the private roofdeck.

Gastronomic grande dame Julia Child and her husband bought this 5,710-square-foot Colonial/Classical Revival mansion, built in 1889 for Harvard professor Josiah Royce, in 1958. Child actually taped two PBS television series in the home's kitchen, but that doesn't mean the buyer can assume toque and tongs at the cordon bleu's ovens and burners, as she donated her kitchen to the Smithsonian Institution. However, Concord-based developers William Hall and Ferle Bramson and Winchester architect Sally Wood Ziegelman have filled its void with a state-of-the-art Italian kitchen as part of complete renovation of the property.

The new kitchen is outfitted with marble counters, frosted-glass and white-lacquer cabinetry, museum-quality lighting and restaurant-caliber stainless-steel appliances, including a six-burner stove and an oven built into the central island counter. The comprehensive silverware/cutlery drawer, pot-rack cabinet and cherry desk for cookbook consultation all honor Child's penchant for customizing her work space. Sunlit by a wall of windows, the kitchen radiates into the dining room, where 9-foot floor-to-ceiling windows look out onto the stone-and-brick terrace and picturesque garden.

This mélange of Child's vibrant progressivism and Royce's scholarly repose permeates the house, a marriage of classical temple and contemporary loft. The columned grand foyer flows into the formal living and dining rooms and library, all with slate fireplaces and paneled bookcases. The dining room features an original window-seat bay and connects to the kitchen via a full second kitchen with a Sub-Zero wine cooler. The library's entertainment center has doors that disappear to reveal a space for a flat-screen TV.

The leaded-glass stairwell window mingles Victorian tracery with Frank Lloyd Wright geometrics. The master suite includes a mahogany dressing room, a master bedroom (with one of three gas-powered fireplaces), a triple-window sitting area, garden-view deck and travertine master bath with water-jet/steam shower, Hydro-Air tub and marble-topped mahogany vanity. A second bedroom has its own bath; two others share a bath. The third floor—with its large bedroom/family room, additional bedroom, full bath, kitchenette and generous cedar closets—can serve as a home office or guest suite. The basement holds a charming reminder of the former owner: a temperature-controlled wine cellar with Child's labels still attached to the cubbyholes.

This ivy-bedecked brick domicile was the home and birthplace of maritime historian Samuel Eliot Morison, renowned for his Pulitzer Prize–winning biographies of Christopher Columbus and John Paul Jones. This property, built in 1869–70 by Morison's grandparents, occupies an entire city block and has two corner exposures, four levels of spacious rooms and nine fireplaces.

The solid oak doors at either end of the foyer open to formal living and dining rooms with 14-foot ceilings, eight-foot windows and hardwood floors, which the current owners restored when they bought the house after Morison died in 1976.

The dining room features a glazed china closet, a marble fireplace mantel and a kitchenette that used to house the old dumbwaiter pantry. The living room is distinguished by a bow window, a white marble fireplace mantel and a silver-leaf Chinese tea paper ceiling. A full bath occupies the original butler's water closet, preserving the casement window from which the butler observed guests arriving at the front door. An etched-glass paneled door introduces the staircase to the basement, where Morison's "big basement kitchen, with its coal range"—as described in his memoir One Boy's Boston—has been converted into a guest suite with bedroom/study, kitchenette, bathroom, powder room, hall closet and door to the garden, in addition to a laundry, wine cellar and workshop. The walled garden's two levels of tree-shaded brick patio offer gate access to Lime Street.

The second-floor library, lined with bookshelves and adorned with a white marble mantel, offers a bow-window view of the Church of the Advent across Mount Vernon Street. The central dressing room is equipped with two walk-in closets and a scalloped sink and connects to the master bedroom, which has a keystone-arched marble mantel and a 12-foot ceiling. The master bath includes a marble-top corner vanity and walnut paneling original to the home, and a modern water-jet tub. More high-end bed-and-bath accommodations can be found in the former children's and servants' quarters above.

Built around 1938 as a radar, sonar and radio equipment factory for the Charlestown Navy Yard, this massive building was reconstructed as a 200-unit luxury waterfront condominium in 1990 by Raymond Development and the Architects' Collaborative. The two broad projecting wings that were added to Unit 906-907 made space for four large carpeted bedrooms, three and a half baths, extensive living-dining-kitchen space, a professional home office and an all-encompassing harbor/city vista.

To the right of the marble-floored central foyer, a herringbone-patterned Brazil cherry floor leads to a powder room and a guest bedroom and en suite marble bath with separate Jacuzzi and tub/shower. The cherry floor continues into the home office, with built-in cherry desks and bookcases, and the living-dining-kitchen area.

The living-dining room's wraparound floor-to-ceiling windows guide your eye along the skyline of the Financial District and the seascapes of the North End, the Boston Waterfront, the World Trade Center, Spectacle Island and Logan Airport. The living-room balcony lets you enjoy morning coffee in sea-breezy ambience.

A peninsular breakfast bar separates the dining room from the open kitchen, with its granite running counter and paneled maple cabinets, including a pot-rack pulley system. Among the appliances are a double dishwasher, a four-burner smooth-top electric stove, a double convection oven, and a water- and ice-dispensing refrigerator.

A play area and children's bedroom lie to the left of the foyer. To the right is a second guest room with a window-seat view. The master bedroom has northeastern corner exposure and a changing room lined with cherry closets, drawers and shoe shelves. The master bath features a green marble shower, a three-person Jacuzzi, a bidet and a marble-top vanity with his-and-her sinks.

Known for such projects as the Kenmore Hotel in 1915, Heritage on the Garden in 1988 and the Residences at the Colonnade this year, the Druker Co. has a 102-year history in Boston. Druker's latest project, slated for completion by the summer of 2004, is a 103-unit full-service condominium with street-level shops, restaurants and theaters. The pinnacle of this magnum opus will be units 1001 and 1002, occupying the building's 10th floor. The two can be purchased separately or as a combined 5,335-square-foot double penthouse flat that offers six bedrooms with nine-foot ceilings, five full baths, two half baths, two fireplaces, and a 360-degree panorama of Boston's skyline from its four corner terraces and four walls of oversize windows. There's also an option to hire your own team of designers and customize the space to your own taste.

Optional features include hardwood floors, state-of-the-art bathroom fixtures, stainless-steel kitchen appliances, a telecommunications system and zoned four-season heat and air conditioning. The model European kitchen on display at Atelier's sales center has wood cabinetry, a granite island and running counters, a Sub-Zero refrigerator and an oversize sink. Also exhibited is a marble model bath with a deep cast-iron steeping tub, mosaic-floored glass shower and marble-top double vanity.

Atelier's amenities include a fitness center with saunas and massage room; a residents' suite with library, dining/conference room, function room and catering kitchen; storage; indoor valet parking; car washing; doorman; porter; and concierge assistance with ta such as housecleaning, dry cleaning, deliveries, catering, dog-walking and restaur and theater reservations. The building abuts the historic Cyclorama building, a ver for Boston Center for the Arts and Huntington Theatre Company productions, a when completed will also include a separate theater pavilion.

157 WARREN AVENUE, SOUTH END: $3 MILLION

Contact: John Neale, Sprogis & Neale Real Estate, South End; 617-262-1504

Built in 1868 by Morton & Chesley as one of four mansard-roofed brick row hous this 4,000-square-foot dwelling fell on hard times over the South End's hundred-y decline from a fashionable neighborhood to a boarding-house district.

"There were multiple units in it and the conditions were not the best," says the c rent owner, who bought the five-story building in 1994 and gave it a top-to-bott makeover. He preserved or replicated architectural details, reconfigured several floors a single-family dwelling, excavated the basement for a carpeted guest suite with kitch bath and laundry, and attached a two-car garage.

"There are three levels you can entertain on without interfering with any of t sleeping or private quarters upstairs," he says. "That allows you to have large parties."

The fun starts on the facade: Scrolled lintels, a cornice of bracket modillions a jigsaw-cut ornaments, and a keystoned arch framing a double-arched walnut entran door introduce a vestibule with a stained-glass door leading to the historically int parlor level. The foyer's herringbone-patterned mahogany floor continues into the l ing and dining rooms. A walnut door leads to the formal living room, where a cro molding, arched marble mantel with cast-iron grate, flowery ceiling medallion and b window view of Hayes Park envelop you in Victorian glamour.

Pocket doors with cut-glass panels extend the elegance into the formal dining roo which has an identical crown molding and mantel, a built-in secretary, a Gothic-arch china cabinet, a new granite wet bar, and a rear-window view of the condo-conver Bancroft and Rice schools of 1869.

For a less formal setting, the floor below has a huge informal living-dining room with antique Beacon Hill walnut mantel surrounding a working fireplace. The adjacent kitch has cherry cabinetry, new Thermador and Sub-Zero appliances, two sinks and a runni granite counter that ends in a peninsular breakfast bar. A large rear deck over the gar can host summer cocktails and cookouts; a private understoop front entrance is also han

The second-floor master suite includes a park-view bedroom; a windowed walk closet; and a bath with cast-iron soaking tub, separate shower, double marble vanity a water closet with telephone. The guest room has its own marble bath. The top fl consists of a front bedroom with abundant storage, a bath like the master with a 4 gallon Jacuzzi, and a rear bedroom/study with a spiral staircase to the roofdeck, wh the entire Back Bay and South End are yours to behold. ib

OPEN-HOUSE ADDICTS

Looking at real estate can be a hard habit to break

BY ERIN HAGEDORN ILLUSTRATION BY BONNIE DAIN/LILLA ROGERS STUDIO

Man's search for shelter is as old as mankind itself. Paleolithic humans staked out caves in which to find refuge from the elements and sanctuary from predators. And it's likely that since earliest civilization, jealousy has flared up over the best places to live. Keeping up with the Joneses was probably as much a concern for early man as it is for today's go-getter. "Joneses have view of water hole, Herman. Why we not have nice view?" early man's wife would ask him. And of course, when it came to where early man lived, the grass was always greener on the other side of the stone fence. "Joneses have grass, Herman. Why we not have grass?"

And so, the field of real estate was born (possibly in an actual field). And a curious thing happened. When the first "open caves" took place, the sellers began noticing that a certain percentage of the visitors had no intention whatsoever of moving out of their own cave; they were simply taking advantage of the opportunity to walk around inside the caves of their neighbors. These original "open-house grazers" began a tradition that has remained remarkably consistent, from the primitive lookers ("Me love antelope painting on wall of kids' den, wife!") to the more refined grazers of today ("That basket-weave parquet is just wonderful, darling!"). For these window-shoppers, visiting homes for sale is an afternoon's entertainment, nothing more.

Laura Frogel, a young mother who has owned a home in Coolidge Corner for years, routinely goes to open houses simply for the Peeping Tom appeal. "I like to see how other people live," Frogel says. "Even if it's a house not in my price range, I can get ideas for decorating or renovating."

Plenty of people, from curious 20-somethings to wistful retirees, share Frogel's enjoyment of checking out strangers' homes. (Consider the popularity of reality shows like Trading Spaces and While You Were Out.) It's no surprise that here in Boston, where so much of day-to-day life is taken up with real estate–related thoughts and worries, open-house grazers are a thriving breed.

Barbara Watkins, a realtor at Century 21 for the past 15 years, has seen her share of what fellow realtors jokingly call professional lookers and tire kickers. When she showed a $3 million mansion in Hingham, she could hardly accommodate all the people who wanted to view the house. "Lots of people just wanted to picture what it would be like to live there," she says. "And you can't really not let someone see it. We ended up doing tours."

The grass-is-greener syndrome is only one reason grazers make a habit of looking at other people's homes. Toni Fernandez spent eight months religiously going to open houses with her husband before buying a Victorian home in Melrose. Even after they bought their house, they continued shopping as a way to find validation: Did we buy the right house? Did we pay the right price? Then, their surveying turned into market research. (What would our house go for compared with others?) "It became a Sunday morning activity for us," Fernandez says. "And it's a really hard habit to break." Nowadays, she says, grazing is more about restoration and renovation. "It's fun to see the architecture of other Victorians and get a sense of what others do with their places. It gives you a lot of ideas of what to do, and what not to do."

Fernandez's husband, Paul, enjoys browsing as much as she does. "You don't have to make a reservation, there's no cost, and it fits in well as a Sunday activity. We get up, have breakfast, and see if it's a nice day for a stroll. What's better on a walk than to poke your nose into a house and say, 'Let's go up to the third floor and see what the view is like'? Maybe there's a window looking out into an incredible backyard that you'd never know existed just seeing it from the street."

Looking inside other people's homes also involves "a certain human level of nosiness," Paul concedes. "Some people must be thinking, 'That house down the street, they don't keep up their lawn, let's go see how lousy their house looks inside.' Or they think, 'That house has wonderful landscaping; I can imagine what they did with the inside. Did they do anything better than we did?'"

Although some lookers make grazing a couple's activity, Watkins tells us that among professional lookers, women definitely outnumber men. "Football Sundays are more popular for sure," she says. "You get women who are out looking while the husband is sitting at home watching the game." Michelle Baker, who has made open-house grazing her Sunday ritual for the past 10 years, says, "I like to do it much more than my husband. He gets a little frustrated. I think men are more in the mind-set of why look if you're not buying?"

There can be an unexpected social appeal of chronic grazing, however. Sunday shopping sprees can result in impromptu get-togethers when the whole neighborhood turns up at the same open house. "Last spring, a beautiful Victorian went on the market down the street, and we met all our neighbors in the house," Toni Fernandez says. "We even met the people who lived in our house seven years ago."

Watkins has mixed feelings about the trend (which she suspects may be far more widespread than it appears, given the number of people who take virtual online tours of homes). "It was more annoying to me when I first started in the business—before I realized that some of these people don't want a house. Some just love to look. Some want a friend. And some did become my friends, actually, because we hung out for so long looking for houses. It's just how it is," Watkins says. "Some people go to yard sales. Other people look at other people's houses. But maybe some of the more obsessive-compulsive lookers should get their license and go into the business. Then they could get into all of the houses and make money at the same time." IB

ANTHONY MICHAEL HALL

IS IN THE ZONE

PRODUCED BY SAMANTHA HOUSE PHOTOGRAPHED BY BILL STREICHER

SHOT ON LOCATION AT THE W HOTEL, NEW YORK

Anthony Michael Hall, whose real name is Michael Anthony Thomas Charles Hall, has been acting since he was 8 years old. People remember him mainly for his role in Sixteen Candles as a panties-stealing geek who, by the end of the movie, had stolen our hearts as well. In the '80s, Hall was pretty much typecast as the nerd du jour, and that's an image that today's audiences have trouble forgetting. When asked about his '80s icon status, Hall, now 35, says, "It's the first thing that everyone asks me. Most '80s stars won't talk about their past, but I'm proud of it. It's enabled me to do what I love for all this time."

It's almost too perfect that the awkward high school kid would become a classic heartthrob nearly 20 years later. When we caught a fresh glimpse of the actor last year, he was looking decidedly handsome. Hall emerged in a 40-second spot promoting his new television show, The Dead Zone, which airs Sunday nights on the USA Network. In The Dead Zone, based on the novel by Stephen King, Hall plays a man who has awakened from a six-year coma with the ability to see people's past and future. In the future, danger lurks around every corner, and Hall's character is the one who can stop it.

The instant the Dead Zone spot aired, you could almost hear Gen-Xers collectively exclaiming, "Wow! Where the hell has he been?" The answer: just about everywhere. After a brief mid-'80s stint on Saturday Night Live, he struggled to find work. He did land some good roles, like Winona Ryder's arrogant, beefy boyfriend in Edward Scissorhands, and the part of Bill Gates in TNT's Emmy-nominated 1999 film, Pirates of Silicon Valley. He even had a role in Six Degrees of Separation. But his look had changed so much that you might not have recognized him. Hall says of his years out of the limelight: "It's not that I didn't want to work. For a while there, I just wasn't getting the jobs that I wanted. During that time, I did work on my method acting, and I think I learned a lot about the art form." When asked what his favorite role was, he says, "I haven't done it yet. I'd like to think the best is in front of me—not behind me."

If you spent some time with Hall, as I did, you'd see that his once-upon-a-time geek persona has completely vanished. He's a charming, down-to-earth guy who's more modest than the average Joe. He talks to most people as if he knows them well. He has a warm smile that puts you instantly at ease, and his personality is more boy-next-door than fancy movie star.

"My mother's family is from Boston, and I was born here," Hall says. "I love this city and the people in it." While he was here in late July, I took him around to some stores and night spots, and everywhere we went, people said the same thing with giddy inflection: "I loved you in Sixteen Candles and Weird Science!" Hall simply smiled and said, "Yeah, I get that a lot."

MOPSY

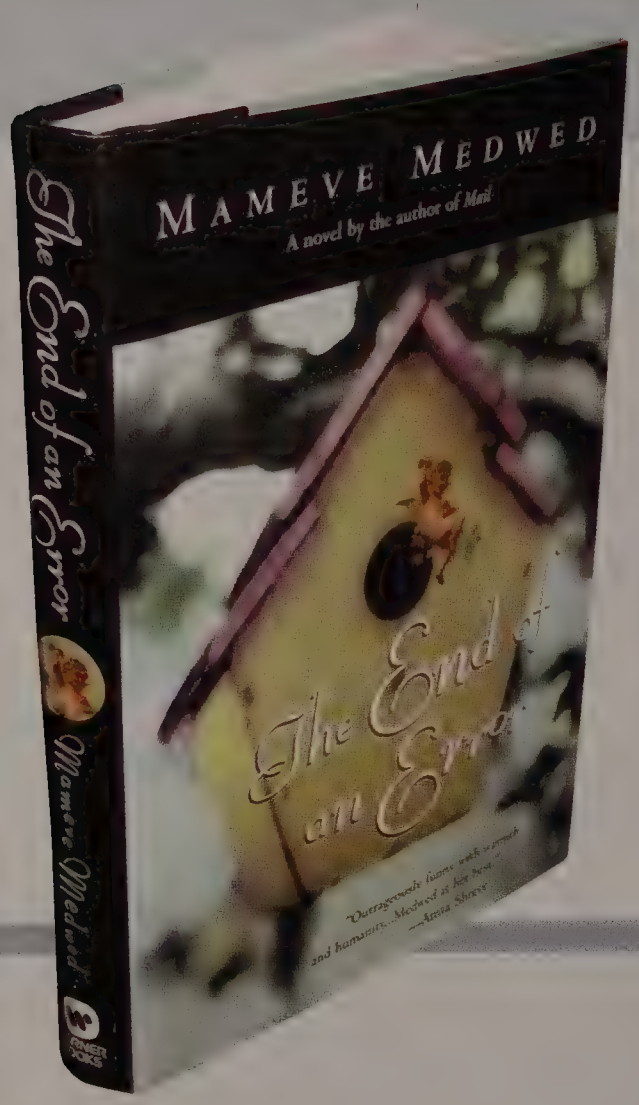
BY MOPSY STRANGE KENNEDY



LOVE AND MARRIAGE

Mameve Medwed, the Cambridge writer who delivered us Mail, has a new novel, The End of an Error, a comedy of persisting love.

Lee Emory, wife of reliable husband and stolid scholar Ben, has a grandmother who is as flamboyant as Ben is middle-of-the-road. High-living and deliciously imperious, grandma Marguerite is the one who introduced Lee to her first love, the tender Englishman Simon, during college. That once-young love has simmered underground for decades, a stretch during which Lee married and happily had three children. Medwed portrays hubby Ben's focus on his biographical quarry, Nathaniel Tarbell, a chronicler of the logging industry, as comically square yet somehow mushily romantic. When, midmarriage, Lee and Ben go to England and stay with Simon and his stodgy, worthy wife, Caroline, there are twinklings of trystiness between the old lovers. The book underscores a poignant dilemma: how to reconcile a perfectly good, long-lasting marriage with a continuing passion for an old flame? Medwed's specialty lies in the delicious mischief with which she views all this, and the intimate liveliness she brings to her characters. Though some are deserving of her satirical salt, she allows both Ben and Simon to be solid, lovable and even slightly ridiculous, so Lee's ambivalence makes for a good elastic tugging.

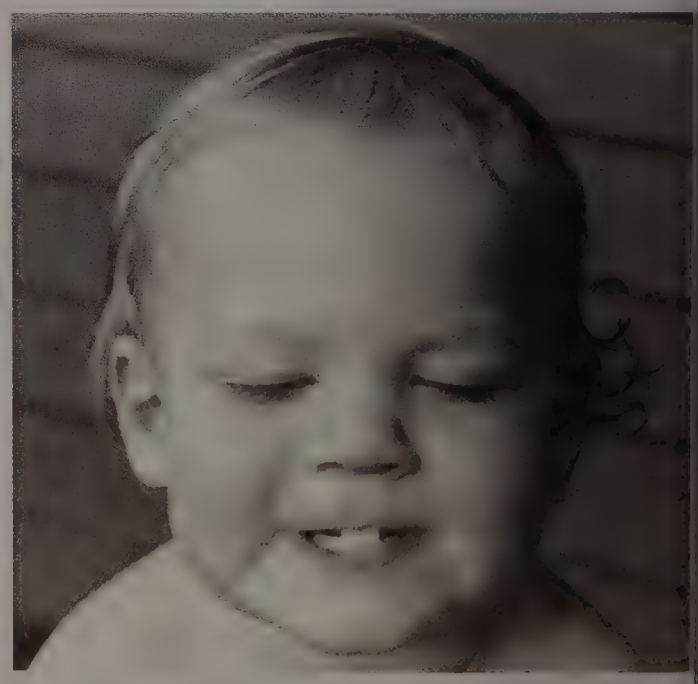
PURITY AND FLAVOR

The Gatehouse, at 110 Comm. Ave. in West Concord, sells colorful Marimekko brand clothes from Finland, plus contemporary furniture and crafts. Call 978-369-0252 for more information.

There's something about a look that once lit up a particular era that works like an energizing youth serum when it comes back in vogue again. In this case, it's Marimekko and its close design cousins. Armi Ratia, the Finnish woman who started the company, was a design innovator whose merry, loose approach had patterns dancing over from dresses onto towels, pillows, fabric and curtains. Marimekko's years in the sun were the 1950s through the '70s, but the cheery, splashy prints—especially one signature red and pink poppy design—are recognizable anywhere. Constructed from 100 percent cotton, the fabrics make you feel 100 percent wrapped in Scandinavian nature. The Gatehouse also features th handiwork of kindred designers: floaty blue ca tan-like dresses; finely meshed, high-quali dresses; and some jackets that are works of ar The Gatehouse is also filled with American co temporary crafts and furniture. Patrick Plourd furniture uses metal scraps and old pieces wood to form singular new tables and more (t store also sells his sculptures). And, evoking t spirit of patriotism, tables are designed with faded flag. Abstract birds, meanwhile, are ma of glass and ceramics. And two designers off enormous, lolling baskets that look like bir nests or silvery spun sugar.

FAMILY PICTURES

Marjorie Nichols photographs weddings, children and families. For $1,350 you get three consultations, a sitting and six prints from different negatives. Call 617-776-6320 or visit www.marjorienichols.com.



Maybe you've seen Marjorie Nichols' gently haunting black-and-white photographs at the Cambridge Trust. Her Nikon focuses mainly on family life and its quotidian, incidental relationships. "I like to capture life on film like a documentary," she says. And while many of her pictures are portraits (three sisters sitting on a tree trunk, for instance), there's usually a strong element of easy, candidly captured flow. One Nichols shot shows expressive summertime siblings at an outdoor table at the Cape, gesturing avidly toward somethi behind the viewer. Another—tilted slightly upward, suggesting the curvy perspective of sand a sea—captures the vacation dailiness of mother, father, baby and dog at a beach. In another, a br and her mother-in-law, shown arm-in-arm from behind, are encompassed by posthurrica weather that interestingly swirls the train of the bride's dress sideways. Nichols is working o sibling series, and her pictures are full of the inborn intimacy of such duos; indeed, intimacy is over her pictures. A slight graininess and shades of Life magazine's photography infuse all of th photographs. Some families have been photographed over years and decades by Nichols, creatin comforting continuity.

REVIEW

A NOBLE UNDERTAKING

Chef Daniel Bruce's new restaurant, Meritage, pairs gourmet cuisine and wine with extraordinary results

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

I have long been guided by the axiom, "you can't eat the view." Years of travel and dining have reinforced the conclusion that the quality of food in a restaurant is often inversely related to the charm of the view from its windows. Meritage, the Boston Harbor Hotel's smart new emporium of fine food and drink, is a clear exception to that rule.

The view from Meritage's large, southern exposed windows, sweeping from Rowes Wharf Marina below to the imposing façade of the U.S. Courthouse across the channel, coexists with superb food efficiently and graciously served in a dining room that is elegant and urbane, yet fresh. Once the food started coming from the kitchen, however, the elegance of the design and decor and the charm of the view seemed beside the point, as all of our senses were engaged by the steady stream of imaginatively conceived and professionally executed treats laid before us.

Meritage's menu offers 24 dinner choices and five multifaceted dessert selections. Rather than dividing its principal dishes into appetizers and main courses, Meritage offers all 24 as large plates ($29) or small plates ($15), with the small plates half the size of the large ones. This clever approach to constructing a menu provides the option of dining conventionally, with a small plate as an appetizer and a large plate as a main course; or "grazing" on an assortment of small plates; or constructing an exciting tasting menu. Meritage's menu divides its large and small plates into six categories matched with wine types.

Right out of the box chef Daniel Bruce seized my attention, with an extraordinarily flavorful yet delicate amuse gueule of fennel cream and parsley oil, served in a tiny, handleless demitasse cup. Some time after we placed our orders a second amuse gueule appeared, accompanied by an explanation and apology that our first courses had been delayed. So exquisite was this gesture of apology—a pristine tartare of raw tuna served in a thin slice of fresh cucumber rolled into a cylinder and garnished with drops of intensely flavored red wine sauce—that I would have been thrilled to encounter such delays all night long.

That thought did not last long, however, once the spectacular dishes we ordered began their triumphal parade from the kitchen. Crispy sweetbreads, served over caramelized fennel with tarragon butter, made new converts to this esoteric dish, the sweet butter and mild licorice hints of the tarragon enhancing this outstanding offering. Poached halibut in a double fish consommé combined the good, firm flesh of this fish with a refined, aromatic, vegetable-infused broth. A tiny, crisp rice cake described on the menu as "wispy" completed this nuanced ensemble.

Pan-seared red grouper with wild asparagus and zucchini paired this soft-textured fish with vegetables cooked to just the right degree of al dente crunch, in a buttery reduction of the cooking juices and sauvignon blanc wine. Stuffed roast rabbit with oven-dried peppers, pea shoots and cipollini onions took the form of a diminutive galantine of white and dark rabbit meat rolled around a stuffing of sweet green peas and then sliced, the dark and light flesh giving it a marbled appearance, with the peas, onions, and gently roasted red pepper contributing different levels of sweetness. Since Georges Bank off the New England coast was reopened to scallopers, large succulent sea scallops have become a staple of supermarkets and restaurants alike. At Meritage these mammoth mollusks were grilled to a perfect, velvety texture.

Chef Daniel Bruce's menu suggests wine pairings with every entrée.

Blackberry-glazed wild Pacific salmo captivated us, as did its garnish of Vermon fiddleheads—the tender, pleasantly bitte spiral-shaped ferns that bring out scores foragers for just a few weeks each spring— and tiny purple turnips. The texture of th salmon was firmer than farm-raise salmon, and the blackberry and Shira demiglaze stood up well to its rich flavo Cumin- and cilantro-roasted rack of lam with fava beans and Sardinian couscou was grouped with the salmon as a selectio to be enjoyed with fruity red wine. While took issue with this pairing—the lamb be longed with a robust red—I took no issu at all with the two magnificent chop cooked rare as ordered, and the superb ac companiment of large-grained couscou and hearty fava beans served in a smal well-constructed pastry shell.

One of the most exquisite offerings o Meritage's menu turned out to be th stuffed Sonoma squab, served on a ragou of chanterelles and nuggets of bacon. Th Vidalia onion–and–herb stuffing proved felicitous merger of sweet and savory, whil the delicate, woodsy chanterelles an smoky bacon created a multidimensiona dish with engagingly varied textures an sweet, salty and smoky flavors.

Meritage will charm beefeaters with i charcoal-grilled filet mignon. Accompanie by creamy spring garli French beans an whipped potatoes, thi steak rivaled the bes offering from any of th tony steakhouses tha dot the Boston land scape. The purée mild, young garlic wa sufficiently subdued t avoid upstaging th mild flavor of beef s tender it virtuall melted in our mouth An alternative to bee but equally appealin to carnivores, was th ostrich filet, crusted with cocoa and ca damom and served with a tangy, slightl sweet black currant sauce and cream Yukon potatoes. The most controversial the dozen dishes that our gang of six sam pled was the barbecued veal loin ove om the kitchen that lacked pic-

After feasting on fully half of eritage's 24 principal dish offerings, we uld have left and been perfectly happy to rgo dessert. Dutifully, however, we orered four of the five trios of desserts on eritage's menu. Each of the trios was ranged around a theme: citrus, white uit, red fruit, chocolate and nut; and each as priced at $11. It would be impossible choose a winner from this array, but for nocoholics, the pot au crème and the bitrsweet chocolate tower—a dark choco-te cylinder filled with light chocolate

Meritage's wine list was admirable, rang-g in price from the $21 Borgo Magredo, n province, a delightful accompaniment the seafood and lighter dishes, to the ore full-bodied 1999 Benziger cabernet ell with the lamb, beef and ostrich.

If Meritage's exquisite food were served a barn, it would still merit a journey.

Wood-grilled quail with green chickpeas and shredded baby artichokes

But the space is a match for its gorgeous waterfront setting. The dining room is anchored at one end by a bar with 12 stools, art deco cranberry glass light fixtures overhead, and a couple of upholstered chairs that would make waiting for one's table a treat rather than a trial. Throughout the restaurant, space-age, stainless steel hanging light fixtures provide soft illumination. Upholstered walls coffered with black woodwork are hung with modern art in black frames replicating the coffering. Well-spaced black granite tables are set with Frette linens, small candles in handsome silver-plated shades, silver butter dishes with diminutive silver cloches, and refined stemware and tableware—replenished with incredible frequency. Legions of energetic, attentive servers were equal to the task of serving six dishes at a table simultaneously. Grace and smiles abounded. Meritage has taken the Boston dining scene by storm. iB

Schlow-Pitch Baseball

Chef aims over the plate…
Special deals aim for your wallet…

BY CAROLYN FAYE FOX

When he takes the mound at Fenway on Aug. 10 (it should have happened by the time you read this), Michael Schlow will be fulfilling his youthful dream of becoming a professional baseball player...sort of. He won't be clothed in the pinstripes of his beloved Yankees; he won't even wear a Yankees cap ("I'm smarter than that," he says).

He will, however, throw out the first pitch at that day's Red Sox game against the Baltimore Orioles. Will Schlow, the chef/owner of hot spots Radius and Via Matta, be tempted to throw a heater?

"I'll be lucky not to throw it over the catcher's head," he says, laughing, a few weeks before the game. "All I want to do is get it over the plate. I'm not throwing any heat, I'm not brushing anyone back."

Chef Michael Schlow throws out the first pitch at the Red Sox game against the Baltimore Orioles.

Schlow's moment in the Fenway spotlight is a gift from a Via Matta regular, unceremoniously presented in a brown paper bag that also included a shrink-wrapped stack of World Series Heroes baseball cards with a Michael Schlow card tucked in. "It's the best gift I ever received," he says. "For me, it's a very big deal. I get to keep the baseball."

And although he's a stalwart Yankees fan, he assures us he always roots for the Sox when they're not playing against baseball's evil empire.

SECOND COURSE

Simplify, simplify: Centro owner Brian O'Neill has hired chef Ben Nathan, most recently of The Fireplace in Brookline, to streamline the Cambridge eatery's menu of rustic Italian fare and scale back the prices. New summer dishes include mission figs with gorgonzola and sweet onion jam; grilled pork chop with sweet and sour peaches, crispy potato cake, and lavender mascarpone; and homemade blueberry gelato.

Chef of the first water: Todd Winer, formerly the Olive Group's floating corporate chef, has been promoted to the position of executive chef at Kingfish Hall. Winer, who helped Todd English open the Tokyo Dives, also trained under such renowned chefs as Charlie Palmer and Bobby Flay.

Table scraps: Curious about Greek wine? Order a bottle with your meal at Paolo's Trattoria in Charlestown and receive your choice of a free appetizer or dessert. No limits here; this offer is available every night, from now until chef/co-owner Paul Delios opens the upscale Meze Estiatorio in Charlestown's City Square in September. More good deals: Tasca Restaurant in Brighton is continuing to offer a Sunday prix-fixe menu at just $21.95 that includes a choice of five appetizers and five main courses, including New Zealand roasted rack and leg of lamb. Also on Sundays through Labor Day, you can order any bottle of wine for half price at Cambridge's Craigie Street Bistrot. Plus, chef/owner Tony Maws is offering a three-course Chef's Choice dinner on Sundays for only $24.95. Openings: Masala Art in Needham Center should be open by the time you read this; Sweet Tomatoes Pizza is working on opening a new restaurant in West Newton, in the space formerly occupied by Ben's Coffee House; Bravo will open in September at the Museum of Fine Arts. iB

MONDAYS IN AUGUST

Movies: Katharine the Great

When Katharine Hepburn died in June, her legions of fans were heartbroken. But the actress lives on in her more than 50 films, and the Coolidge Corner Theatre is helping to keep them in the spotlight with a tribute series that takes place Mondays at 7:30 pm in August. On Aug. 18 Woman of the Year, George Stevens' 1942 comic romance in which Hepburn first teamed up with Spencer Tracy, screens. Tracy plays an opinionated New York sportswriter and Hepburn a sassy newspaper columnist; the two wage war but eventually fall in love. Next up Aug. 25 is Suddenly, Last Summer, the way-ahead-of-its-time 1959 film costarring Hepburn, Elizabeth Taylor, Montgomery Clift and Albert Dekker. (Hepburn and Taylor were both nominated for Oscars.) This film, based on a Tennessee Williams play, has it all—high drama, homosexuality, insanity, murder, lobotomies and a touch of incest. 290 Harvard St., Brookline (617-734-2500). www.coolidge.org. $8.50.

Throw on your pegged-leg, acid-wash jeans; brush on some blue eye shadow; feather your hair and get ready to rock to tunes like "I Melt With You," "Tainted Love" and "Rebel Yell" aboard the Giving Inspiration for Tomorrow (GIFT) foundation's Cruise Back to the '80s. The Ohio-based cover band the Reaganomics performs hits by Men Without Hats, Duran Duran, Simple Minds, Robert Palmer and others to raise money for the foundation's endowment, which supports local and national charitable groups through a variety of fund-raising, volunteer and collaborative opportunities. The three-hour tour includes hors d'oeuvres, a cash bar and a silent auction. Board at Long Wharf, Boston (866-468-7619). www.thegiftfoundation.org. 6:30-10 pm. $35.

MON./AUG. 18–FRI./AUG. 22

Tastings: The Pleasures of Prix-Fixe

You could make your own lunch for three weeks straight, cancel your gym membership for a month, or bypass Newbury Street on your way home from work in order to save up enough money for a big night out at the Federalist...or you could simply make reservations during Restaurant Week, when all dinners are $30.03 and lunches are $20.03. We vote for the last option. From Aug. 18-22, more than 75 restaurants will offer this prix-fixe option with hopes of luring in new diners. Among the other restaurants participating are Azure, No. 9 Park, Spire, Hamersley's Bistro, Pigalle and Via Matta. Visit www.bostonusa.com/restaurantweek for the complete list. (888-SEE-BOSTON).

CityScope: BYO Alpo

Calling all hounds, mutts, mongrels, pooches and puppies: It's officially your day at the Rack. This is the fourth year the Rack has hosted Dog Day Afternoon, an annual favorite that routinely draws in more than 100 dogs, their owners and heaps of onlookers. Those thinking of participating should keep this in mind: If you dress up your dog in creative attire, he or she can participate in the Doggie Fashion Show. Better yet, enter your star-quality pooch in the first-ever American Fido talent contest (a la American Idol). And don't forget the doggie/owner lookalike contest. Many prizes are up for grabs, including doggie lollipops, biscotti and cupcakes, all handed out by Cookie Monster. The event is sponsored by THE IMPROPER BOSTONIAN and Star 93.7, whose Fast Freddy emcees. Proceeds benefit the World Society for the Protection of Animals and the MSPCA. 24 Clinton St., Boston (617-725-1051). 6 pm.

THU./AUG. 14–SUN./AUG. 17

CityScope: Blessing the Waters

If you're stuck in the city in mid-August, head to the North End to be transported to Sicily—if only for a few days. The annual Fisherman's Feast, which takes place Aug. 14-17, began in Boston in 1911, but the tradition dates back to the 16th century in Sciacca, Sicily, where fishermen paid homage to the Madonna del Soccorso (Our Lady of Help). It's quite a scene, with local men hefting a statue of the Madonna through the streets and the not-to-be-missed ceremonial Flight of the Angel, when a young girl bedecked in white is lowered over the crowd on a pulley. Add live entertainment and Italian food, and you're definitely not in Boston anymore, Toto. Fleet and Lewis Streets, North End, Boston. www.fishermansfeast.com. Free.

Seabiscuit result: The book was better

BY PAUL SHERMAN

Seabiscuit was the odds-on favorite to bring class to the crass summer movie season. But this sure winner disappoints. Granted, Gary (Pleasantville) Ross' adaptation of Laura Hillenbrand's unforgettable book steers clear of most Hollywood gimmickry, and its blend of character and history aims higher than most movies. But if you've read Hillenbrand's best-seller about the up-and-down ride of the legendary 1930s racehorse, you'll probably leave the movie unsatisfied.

Seabiscuit tells the story of the thoroughbred that—like jockey Red Pollard (Tobey Maguire), trainer Tom Smith (Chris Cooper) and owner Charles Howard (Jeff Bridges)—took advantage of a second chance in life to excel. But instead of the lush human drama that the book rolled out, the movie serves up an uplifting sports story in the Rocky and Rudy tradition, designed to send ticket buyers out with a smile.

In Seabiscuit, Tobey Maguire plays the jockey Red Pollard, who gets a new lease on life

Ross struggles with the telling of that story and makes several questionable choices along the way. As the book did, Seabiscuit takes the time to supply background details on its three human characters, and though their lives climaxed in the late 1930s and early 1940s, the movie starts 30 years earlier. At the time, Howard is a bicycle repairman who starts selling Buicks and makes his fortune (with shades of Bridges' forward-thinking title character in Tucker), and Smith is a mustang breaker out west who is becoming obsolete. A little while later, the action picks up Pollard, a well-read youth whose family lands in a shantytown when the depression hits.

Howard bottoms out after his young son dies and his first marriage ends. Smith kicks around racetracks with little to do but heal broken-down nags others have given up on. And Pollard, with a gift for riding, is nudged out the door by his struggling family, yet can't make a better living on his own as a jockey.

Cut-ins narrated by historian (and frequent PBS host) David McCullough, consisting of Ken Burns–style montages of black-and-white still photos, pepper the first hour of Seabiscuit—and here's where the movie starts stumbling. The more they occur, the more unnecessary these cut-ins are. Do we really need narration to tell us betting on the ponies is "the chance to turn bad luck into good"? After the historical background about western migration, industrialization and the depression are established, the movie's fictionalized drama needs to take over, but Ross won't let it.

The problem only gets worse when Seabiscuit changes narrators halfway through. That's after Howard and second wife Marcela (Elizabeth Banks) decide to dabble in racehorses. They hire Smith, who grabs underachieving Seabiscuit for a small claiming fee, and get Pollard to ride the habitual loser. After a period of mainly psychological rehab, they turn Seabiscuit into a winner and fan favorite, which brings hammy radio announcer Tick Tock McGlaughlin (William H. Macy) into the story. His over-the-top (though amusing) broadcasts on Seabiscuit's career are the new "narration." (Tick Tock is the main fictional addition to the story, although in the movie's streamlining, the considerable role of Suffolk Downs has been lost.)

It's as if Ross couldn't decide whether he was making a socioeconomic docudrama (the McCullough version) or an entertaining lark (the Tick Tock version), so he switches from one to the other with the finesse of a 10-ton Mack truck. Screech. And the movie ends up being neither.

The schizo narration dilemma is just one example of how the movie struggles to externalize its themes about second chances and about how late bloomer Seabiscuit became a folk hero for a depression-walloped nation that, like the horse, was looking for an opportunity to succeed. When Smith tells Howard early on that "you don't throw a whole life away because he's banged up a little," in reference to a horse, it's an obvious metaphor for the story's human characters. But Seabiscuit hammers this line in, with Howard reprising it to Smith in reference to injury-prone Pollard. Later, the otherwise splendid climax nearly ruins itself with a Pollard voice-over about how Seabiscuit "fixed" the human characters, not vice versa. Yes, we get it!

If Ross had given his script one more pass, made a firmer decision about the movie's tone and put more faith in visual storytelling, Seabiscuit might have been a winner. But, like A Civil Action and The Perfect Storm, it's another unremarkable movie that doesn't measure up to its remarkable nonfiction source. IB

Seabiscuit ★★

Written and directed by Gary Ross. Based on the book by Laura Hillenbrand. With Jeff Bridges, Chris Cooper, Tobey Maguire, Elizabeth Banks, Gary Stevens and William H. Macy. Rated PG-13. Universal Pictures.

New Releases

Buffalo Soldiers ★★★
What's a bored soldier in a peacetime army suppl battalion, with sales skills and dreams of ill-gotte gains, to do? Con, con, con. That's exactly wh Joaquin Phoenix's antihero does in this story s within the U.S. Army in 1989 Germany. He tak advantage of his oblivious CO (Ed Harris), r mances his sergeant's frisky daughter (Anna Paqui and plots to trade a cache of stolen weapons f drugs. This military comedy often travels the sam path as Catch-22 and TV's Phil Silvers Show, b Phoenix wreaks more havoc before 9:30 than mo of us do all day. (At Copley Place.)

Camp ★★
Actor turned writer and now director Todd Graff unconvincingly feel-good indie movie features gung ho teen cast playing the aspiring singer dancers and actors at Camp Ovation, a performi arts camp. There's some novelty in seeing talente teens play adults in fully staged production numbe of Sondheim or Bacharach-David songs (this is t Terror of Tiny Town of musicals). But the comed drama is such a superficial afterschool special, wi all its dilemmas miraculously resolved without fuss muss, that it has no emotional credibility. Despite the unrequited love, sexual dilemma and backsta bickering, it's a trifle. (At Kendall Square.)

Capturing the Friedmans ★★★★
Has a movie ever plunged the viewer into great moral ambiguity than Andrew Jarecki's documenta about the Friedman family of Great Neck, Long land? They splintered apart in the late 1980s, whe father Arnold and youngest son Jesse were accused molesting Arnold's computer students. On one han it's easy to see how the two Friedmans, and Arnold particular, might be guilty: He first got into troub for possessing child porn, and he confessed to havi improper relations with minors at other times in h life. On the other hand, the police's investigati and the testimony that investigators got from t kids are both very suspect. It's impossible to belie the Friedmans are totally in the wrong, or total right in their denials. You have to believe the truth somewhere in the middle. So is the movie a cautio ary tale about evil lurking beneath an everyday su urban surface or about the power of suggestion a the abuse of power? It's both. (At Copley Plac Kendall Square and Coolidge Corner.)

Dirty Pretty Things ★★★
For years, director Stephen Frears has been flitti back and forth between Hollywood movies like Hi Fidelity and smaller movies made in his native En land. This intimate drama, set in the subculture London's illegal-immigrant community, is his be "small movie" since the rowdy Roddy Doyle adapt tion, The Van. Chiwetel Ejiofer and Audrey Tau are sympathetic as two co-workers in a Lond hotel who are repeatedly taken advantage of bosses and immigration officials. Ejiofer, who play disgraced Nigerian doctor hanging on to his self- spect, is especially affecting, and although the pl gets more intricate than expected, Frears never sorts to sentimentality in getting the audience care for his heroes. (At Harvard Square.)

Johnny English ★★★
There's nothing very special about Rowan (Bla Adder, Bean) Atkinson's spy spoof. But even thou you can sometimes see the gags coming, and though the comedy of errors shares similar territo with Mike Myers' Austin Powers movies and Pe Sellers' Inspector Clouseau films, Atkinson is able make enough of the jokes work that the movie ra a mild recommendation. (At Boston Common, Fe way and suburbs.)

Secret Lives of Dentists ★★
The perils of modern masculinity are sometim amusing and provocative in this comedy abou dentist (Campbell Scott) who suspects his dent wife (Hope Davis) is having an affair. But take aw the laughs injected by Denis Leary, playing a cran patient who becomes an imaginary confidant of t husband, and there's not a whole lot left. Al Rudolph's movie is sluggish until Leary's sourp musician becomes a fantasy figure for the conflict husband, commenting on the dentist's demandi kids and egging him on to confront his wife. (Kendall Square.)

Shaolin Soccer ★★½
Hong Kong action-comedy star Stephen Chow (T God of Cookery) storms the multiplex with t dubbed version of one of his Asian hits. He play Bruce Lee–loving Shaolin kung fu disciple w gathers a soccer team made of his former martial a classmates and enters a tournament. The comedy an odd combination of lots of special effects and of vaudeville-style slapstick. To add to the oddity, sometimes it's cringingly unfunny, while other times it's clever, tongue-in-cheek and very funny. It's like a live-action cartoon, and the airborne soccer matches have little to do with the earthbound version the Revolution plays. Add that fact to the Mighty Ducks–like story and it's easy to see why this is being marketed to kids. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Spy Kids 3D: Game Over ★★

"Don't split up," pint-sized spy Juni Cortez (Daryl Sabara) yells at one point in the third Spy Kids movie, "It never works!" He's right. This installment is almost all Juni, with little of his chemistry with sister Carmen (Alexa Vega) and just a taste of their sophisticated parents (Antonio Banderas, Carla Gugino). In separating the Cortezes, much of the fun is gone from this second sequel, in which Juni enters a 3D videogame to rescue Carmen and stop the Toymaker (Sylvester Stallone) from taking over kids' minds. The gimmicks of 3D and Stallone have their amusing moments, but this is the first film in the series to appeal mainly to children. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Swimming Pool ★★½

French writer-director Francois Ozon has made somber movies like Under the Sand and playful movies like 8 Women. His English-language debut seems like an attempt to blend both types, by pairing the former's Charlotte Rampling and the latter's Ludivine Sagnier. Rampling plays a dowdy English mystery writer whose publisher (Charles Dance) offers her his home in the south of France for a writing holiday. The unexpected arrival of the publisher's horny French daughter (Sagnier) spoils the working vacation, but it sure livens up the movie. Sagnier's devil-may-care sensuality is a helluva lot more fun than the slow Rampling prologue, and the two women embark on a passive-aggressive cat-and-mouse game. The payoff is way too subtle and puzzling to deliver the needed oomph, though, and the movie remains mostly a showcase for Sagnier's devilish performance. (At Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

Terminator 3: Rise of the Machines ★★★

It's been nearly 20 years since the first Terminator, and for the last 10 years, Arnold Schwarzenegger has been a total joke. Yet this sequel improbably comes through. Compared with the other big movies this summer, its story is meaty, its concerns serious and its treatment dramatic. Arnold travels back from the future again (in a different android shell) to protect John Connor (Nick Stahl), the future hero who will help the humans beat back the computers who take over the world. Also dragged into the fight this time is Claire Danes, who's surprised to learn she's also going to be a future revolutionary. Super-robot killing machine Kristanna Loken makes a better icy villainess than Demi Moore in Charlie's Angels: Full Throttle, and Schwarzenegger excels at the role for which he was always best suited. This is definitely the drive-in movie of the summer. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Thirteen ★★★

In the spectrum of movies about troubled teenaged girls, Catherine Hardwicke's debut falls somewhere between the cliches of the recent Blue Car and the unique emotional eeriness of The Virgin Suicides. Evan Rachel Wood, who has a Kirsten Dunst–like mix of sweetness and naughtiness, is very convincing as the initially girlish seventh-grader who yearns to hang out with the popular, more physically mature girls—and gets to, by taking drugs, shoplifting and pushing her budding sexuality just as they do. Meanwhile, her frazzled mom (Holly Hunter) tries to straddle the line between being firm and friendly, while her new best friend (Nikki Reed), who cowrote the script with Hardwicke, manipulates everyone in sight. Although the movie can sometimes come off as a pat cautionary tale, its emotional messiness is awfully realistic, with most everyone oblivious to their own faults. (At Kendall Square.)

Tupperware! ★★★

Local filmmaker Laurie Kahn-Leavitt zips us back to the 1950s, when Massachusetts inventor Earl Tupper and go-getter Brownie Wise rallied a legion of housewives to sell the plastic containers that took over the world. Before women's lib, Tupperware sales parties were a gateway to earnings and empowerment, and Wise was the most powerful female executive in the country. Through interviews with Tupperware ladies, amazing clips from company films and a heavy dose of vintage music (thanks to WMBR DJ John Funke), Kahn-Leavitt evokes the country's postwar materialism and the opportunities Tupperware presented to thousands of working-class women. Breaking Out

Writing Goes Behind Bars in a New Documentary

Eve Ensler has been helping women express themselves since she took the word "vagina" out of the doctor's office and into the theater. What I Want My Words to Do to You, a 2003 PBS documentary showing at the Coolidge Corner Theatre through Aug. 21, captures the Vagina Monologues playwright's latest project: a writing workshop at a maximum-security women's prison. Since 1998, Ensler has conducted the workshops in hopes of inspiring the inmates to think and talk about their lives in prison and the consequences of their incarceration.

Producer Judith Katz was so moved by the inmates' monologues, as read by professional performers at one of Ensler's many celebrity-studded fundraisers, that she decided to capture the workshop process on film.

Katz and co-producers Madeleine Gavin and Gary Sunshine took their cameras inside New York's Bedford Hills Correctional Facility to document the emotional writings of 15 prisoners, including such high-profile felons as Pamela Smart and Weather Underground members Kathy Boudin and Judith Clark. What I Want My Words to Do to You, winner of the Freedom of Expression Award at the 2003 Sundance Film Festival, seeks to dispel the myth that "all prison women are tough and mean," says Katz. "Most are victims of violence and that's how they ended up being violent themselves." The documentary culminates when the inmates view a theatrical performance of their writing by seasoned actresses, including Mary Alice, Glenn Close, Hazelle Goodman, Rosie Perez and Marisa Tomei. Placid expressions and proud reflection on their progress show that "the more the inmates take responsibility for their crimes, the more they transform," says Katz. Coolidge Corner Movie Theatre, 290 Harvard St., Brookline (617-734-2500). Through Aug. 21. Call for show times.—Jamie Bellavance

28 Days Later ★★★

Trainspotting director Danny Boyle's apocalyptic sci-fi/action film owes a lot to those of George Romero, especially Dawn of the Dead. Still, it's a creepy and lively blend of character drama, zombie film, social commentary, vampire film and action, set in motion when a group of animal-rights activists frees rage-infected lab primates. The animals violently attack and infect the activists, who attack other humans and so on, until nearly all of England (and perhaps the world) is acting like bloodthirsty soccer hooligans. The movie follows Jim (Cillian Murphy), who awakens from a coma into this new world. He meets up with the few uninfected people left, and they try to find any remaining vestige of society and stay alive. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Weather Underground ★★★½

Since the range of political discussion is so narrow these days, and those who merely vote are actually considered "involved," it's easy to forget how much wider the political spectrum was back in the late 1960s and early 1970s. Sam Green and Bill Siegel's documentary is a fascinating reminder. It profiles the Weathermen, the militant splinter group from the Students for a Democratic Society, whose most infamous achievement was its "Bring the War Home" campaign, a series of bombings meant to remind Americans of the acts the Nixon administration was perpetrating in our name in Vietnam. Although the 90-minute movie sometimes just scratches the surface, it's full of bracing old clips of Weathermen leaders like Bernardine Dohrn and Mark Rudd, as well as bittersweet, candid interviews with the now middle-aged radicals. (At the Brattle Theatre, Aug. 22-Sept. 4.)

Tori Amos finds new wisdom and maturity through an American travelogue that grew into her latest album

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

When Tori Amos pulls into the FleetBoston Pavilion Aug. 24, she'll be two days past her 40th birthday. And although the singer-pianist has always been more of a sophisticated pop eccentric than an MTV cornflake girl, she clearly has the milestone in mind when she considers her long-term career.

"For a while, we've been caught up in worshipping the youth culture, which is very dangerous, because you lose all that wisdom from the women in the tribe," says Amos, who has been making tremors since her 1992 solo debut, Little Earthquakes, wrapping piano filigrees around ethereal soprano musings.

"So many people want to be 24 when they're almost 40, but more people at 24 should want to be more like 40, especially when they open their mouth," Amos says from a California tour stop. "Sometimes I think the women's magazines have done us a disservice, because they've devalued what it takes to gain wisdom, and what it takes to carry grace, and that's about experience. You can't go to the gym and get that."

Amos' experience thus far includes seven albums, eight Grammy nominations and countless tours. The songs on her latest CD, Scarlet's Walk, came out of Amos' reflections on the American experience as she traveled across the U.S. in the fall of 2001.

"The feeling that if you asked questions, you were betraying your country was something that I found was troubling people," she says of that tour in the wake of 9/11. "The work was changing as I saw how people were questioning their relationship with America as a soul. A lot of America has not been about the soul of the land. It's about the forefathers who control the land."

For the CD's narrative, however, Amos departed from her past writing style to convey the songs through a character named Scarlet, whose travels paralleled her own journey in some ways, but not all. "I needed people to see themselves in Scarlet," she says. "I might be in Scarlet, but she was her own persona—and she changed me. She had four lovers in the story. When I was writing it, I wasn't having four lovers. My husband has asked me this question!"

Songs range from romantic encounters to the haunting 9/11–shaded confusion of "I Can't See New York" to "Gold Dust," in which Scarlet gives birth to a child—as Amos did in September 2000. Several songs also contemplate the plight of Native Americans, a subject that strikes a personal chord with Amos, who used to listen to stories told by her part-Cherokee maternal grandfather.

"His belief was that until the land could be seen as sovereign and autonomous, and as a spiritual mother, we as European-Americans, African-Americans, Latino-Americans—the whole ball of wax—are not caretakers for the country," she says. "We're just takers. We are not nurturing and leaving anything for several generations from now. He said to me, a generation must rise—and to redefine generation, it's not an age, it's a consciousness. And that has really stayed with me, the idea of redefining power."

Given that Amos' fans rank among the most fanatical in pop music, such adulation could provide its own sense of empowerment. But she says, "You can't get drawn into that. You really have to see yourself as a space. You hold a space for people to come and claim their own sovereignty."

Growing up, Amos claimed her musical sovereignty from a broad pool. A piano prodigy, she studied at Baltimore's Peabody Conservatory from age 5, but rebelled against the classical regimen and was expelled at age 11. She shifted her focus to musicians like Ray Charles, Joni Mitchell, Laura Nyro, Pink Floyd and Led Zeppelin over the years to follow.

"People have impressions of the piano that I don't have," Amos says. "My kind of orientation as a keyboard player has been Jimi Hendrix." Now, after spending most of her career performing in a dramatic solo context, she tours in a trio format with bassist Jon Evans and drummer Matt Chamberlain. And in addition to her trusty Bosendorfer grand piano, Amos takes turns on Fender Rhodes and Wurlitzer electric pianos. The Wurlitzer was used by Country Joe and the Fish at the original Woodstock. Now it's painted with a Cherokee flag.

Amos' current tour ends just in time for her daughter Natasha's third birthday. "Ballet class starts in September, so the clock's ticking," Amos says. "We made a deal that I'm going to be off the road by her birthday. The last show is Sept. 4 and her birthday's Sept. 5. I wouldn't say I don't cut it close, but I only sort of make it before I turn into a pumpkin." iB

Feeling It

Feel keeps grassroots dance on till dawn in Brookline

Brookline is probably the last place you'd expect to find an all-night dance club. But Feel, the Friday-night dance party at the recently opened Brookline Community Center for the Arts, makes up for its lack of strobes and lasers with an energetic crowd and dedicated DJs who keep the music going until the decidedly un-Bostonlike hour of 6 am.

Dancers jump around until 6 am at the BCCA

Every week, professional dance instructor Jose Eric Cruz teams up with the BCCA's Dan Yonah Marshall and Boston House Music Coalition DJs Bob Diesel and Maurice Wilkey to present Feel. Their aim, the group says, is to bring together people from all walks of life to enjoy a night of music without the dress codes and restrictions of commercial clubs. The BCCA space seems to complement the group's back-to-basics approach, with no club-themed decor or lighting. Feel is spread over two floors, with Cool-DJ Big Ones, Act One and Bradford James providing a mix of music upstairs on the "Elevation" level, while Wilkey and Diesel spin garage house and disco classics downstairs on the "Sanctuary" level. Because no alcohol is served at the BCCA, Feel can keep the dancing going well past the usual 2 am curfew time, and all ages are welcome.

Feel, Friday nights at the Brookline Community Center for the Arts, 14 Green St., Brookline. (617-738-2800). www.bccaonline.com. $5 before 12 am, $10 after. —Daniel Spurling

"Due to season allergies and hypersensitive skin, permanent makeup seemed the perfect solution. I never wore a lot of eyeliner or lipstick, so I wanted my results to be conservative. The result was just how I imagined, very natural.
The effect on my life is dramatic, though. I wake up looking less tired, and I spend far less time getting ready in the morning. My experience was pain free and the work was perfect.
Thank You, Monica!"

Chuck Palahniuk Diary
Coolidge Corner Theatre – Tickets $2

In his latest novel Diary, Chuck Palahniuk, author of Fight Club, Choke, and Lullaby, examines the dark (that's right, dark–duh!) relationship between art and suffering, and the terrifying extremes that people will go to in order to preserve a generations-old way of life.

9/18 Thursday 7PM
Julianna Baggott The Madam
Joy Fielding Lost

In The Madam, Julianna Baggott writes a beautiful, aching novel based on her grandmother, who was raised in a house of prostitution, and her great-grandmother who was a madam. Joy Fielding's Lost takes readers into the heart of a woman overwhelmed by her determination to find the daughter she's lost, and, if at all possible, to reclaim the respect she once had for herself.

Good Samaritans

Many thanks to those who stopped to help me after my bicycle accident July 13 on the Longfellow Bridge. In particular, thanks to Heather and her friends, who were kind enough to drive me home. It's a comforting thought to know that there are so many good people out there!
—Justine

Mullet Man

To the tall skinny guy in tights who had that spiky mullet: I saw you sing at Club Hideout off the Wonderland T stop, on the Blue Line. I was the blond punk-rock girl in the front row. I heard they call you the "Goblin King." All I know is, this girl fell in love! I want to be the babe with the power. Be there again some Friday night? If you want to talk, I will be wearing a bright pink ribbon in my hair. I usually sit under the big Frank Sinatra portrait with my friends Sarah and Kelly. Oh yeah, if you are singing again, I'd love to hear "Dance Magic Dance" by David Bowie. It's my favorite!
—DanceMagicDanceGirl

You and Me and Seafood Makes Three

You stole my gaze the first day I saw you. You had just started working at BR Copley and we met in the back room. I was captured by your cute smile and the very sound of your voice. Over the months we worked many deliveries together and I got to know you better. When you worked on the floor, I would find any excuse to come out from the back room to talk to you, or when you came out back, I would find myself a project close to you just so I could get one more glimpse of your smile and hear your voice. One night during a late delivery I promised to take you out for seafood on your birthday. And to this day I'm still kicking myself that I missed a great chance to see that smile and hear that voice again. If you read this note, please e-mail me and tell me how you are and maybe we can go out for that dinner I had promised you.
—me_you_seafood@hotmail.com

Good Bi-kiss

You and your girlfriend spiced up a boring night at the bar in the Back Bay on July 17. The kiss was so hottt. Thanks again.
—lesbianlover442003@yahoo.com

On the Way to the Cape

It was June 20. You: white Jeep Cherokee. Me: red Honda Civic coupe (long blond hair). We were stuck in traffic and kept passing each other and saying hi, waving and flirting. I have no idea if you even read these, but I figured it was worth a shot. So if you're interested in meeting in the same lane, maybe you'll drop me a note.
—getorganizedal@hotmail.com.

To Concerned Canine Sympathizers

How can you call yourself concerned if you walked by a pet locked in a car in 98-degree heat? That warrants a phone call to the police and even smashing a window to let the poor thing out, not a veiled letter to a magazine. You are really lame!
—An action-taking canine sympathizer

Orange Line Hottie

I see you almost every night around 5:30 riding the Orange Line to Wellington Station. You are a fine-looking man of Spanish descent with dark hair, about 5'9", and extremely handsome. I am too shy to approach you. I think that you would recognize me if you saw me. I was sitting next to you and you were bouncing your blue ball. I think that you were so into playing with your ball that you didn't even notice the attractive babe—that's me—sitting next to you. If you ever need help playing with your ball give me a call!
—Orange Line babe

Instructions for Reading on the Subway

First, if you are reading a newspaper, I have nothing to say to you. You are an amateur. Select a book. A childhood favorite, a New York Times best-seller, or Harry Potter. Do not be ashamed of the cover. Pay the $1 fare. Walk to the back of the trolley because there you are less likely to be swiped, smacked, smashed, mobbed, mugged, hugged or held at gunpoint. Place your gym bag at your feet. This is courtesy. Place your left hand on the rail for balance. Stand in third position. Shoulder your purse and clamp it beneath your elbow. Hold book aloft and follow the words left to right unless you're reading Hebrew—then track right to left. If you are reading Chinese or Japanese, you are too smart for me and don't need my advice. Turn pages when the train is stopped. If this is too difficult, take a cab.
—Chet Noir

10-Point Antler

I saw you at the Paradise Lounge. Three songs into Antler's set, I couldn't help noticing you, and you noticing me. With your long red hair, bell-bottom hip-huggers, silver hoop earrings, and sea-water eyes, you stood out like a rose in a room full o dandelions. I have black hair, was wearing a denim jacket, rust-colored cords and black boots. I know you remember me because during one of the band's quiet songs, as the rest of the crowd raised their lighters, you turned to me and said "I dig your Motorhead shirt." Unfortunately, I was too shy to do anything but say thanks and smile. What are the chances you'll be at the Paradise for the next Antler show? I'll be there, wearing the same shirt. Let's talk more over a cold PBR.
—Motorhead shirt

My Little Crypt-Keeper

It was Halloween in 2000. Amidst all the people I saw you, the most beautiful thing I have ever seen. It was almost like you were glowing. We spoke briefly then we went our separate ways. We were supposed to meet after our friends were gone but fell asleep. That night I knew you were the one for me and no on else would ever do. Now it's been almost three years and I couldn't be more in love with you. I just want you to know that I will never forget that night for as long as I live. I love you honey. Happy birthday.
—Your Ghoul

August 7, 2002, Corner of Summer and Cedar

You have made every day special for an entire year, and I dream of all the years yet to come. I found it, my rainbow connection, my Kermit the Snog. I love you.
—Me

The Fire + Ice Man Cometh

You have to be the most delicious man I have ever encountered! We struck up a conversation at Fire + Ice at the bar. Your eyes were so deep and your stare so intense that can't get you out of my mind! We only spoke for about five minutes, casually that I fear you may not remember me. You, tall muscular, brown hair, sunkissed skin and hug brown eyes. I was the tall blond wit green eyes and we talked about how we both loved the fruit-soaked vodka at Fire + Ice. If only I was bolder and told you I wanted to drink one of those shots off of what can only imagine as your well-defined abs. If we should happen to run into each other there again—hint, hint, say on a Monday night—we can discuss body shots and other adventures further.
—Wishing for more fire, less ice

rockie horoscope

AUGUST 13 – 26, 2003 BY ROCKIE GARDINER

LEO JULY 23-AUGUST 22

Lions know how to put on a spectacular show, the kind of party that leaves a lasting impression. Since grandiose Jupiter is about to exit your sign (and won't return for another 12 years), and lovable Venus won't even be in Leo for your next birthday, make this year's celebration as memorable as you possibly can. It'll be worth the extra expense if the goodwill you generate now becomes an insurance policy for the dark and stormy days that might come three years from now, when Jupiter starts testing you.

VIRGO

AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

It'll be just a few more weeks of waiting before you can welcome generous Jupiter into your sign for a full year's worth of opportunity, prosperity and sheer luck. Until then, pay attention to the small stuff, the "i's" you may have to dot now that your Mercury ruler is in Virgo. Make preparations now for the end of the month, when Jupiter arrives and Mercury turns retrograde. You know the drill: Get the car and electronic equipment repaired ASAP, make contingency plans in case of delays or cancellations, back up your files, cover your ass.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

Weirdness around the house, a whiff of scandal about a relative, an unexplained oil leak in the driveway: When lit by the rays of the Leo sun, amorphous Neptune can take many shapes. Why a strange turn of events becomes a source of artistic inspiration is your secret to share. But that can happen when your romantic Venus ruler comes face-to-face with that imaginative Neptunian vibe. A subtle spiritual connection could become a steamy affair next week when passionate Pluto horns in. Summer fun and games.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

Keep your eye on the glitter and the glitz. Behind the glamour, the showmanship, the exaggerations and the promises lies the real thing, the pure gold. Maybe not a huge pile, but enough to enrich your coffers. Add an active social life, and you'll easily see how having expansive Jupiter in your Leo midheaven has dramatized/traumatized your life. Jupiter will soon enter Virgo, where it should protect you from any more slings, arrows and painful opportunities to "grow."

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

Affirmation of the changes you've been going through, the rehabilitation taking place on a cellular level—Pilates exercises, human growth-hormone shots, anti-depressants—arrives as the proud Leo sun and affectionate Venus support Pluto, ruler of regeneration, in your sign. Rewards for a successful metamorphosis are rare, and seen more often in theatrical productions than in everyday life. But they do occur, even to Centaurs who no longer run with the wind. Look for a friendly Lion bearing gifts.

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

Something slightly fishy about a financial matter could sound an inner alarm, but other than a misunderstanding about money, nothing should disturb your equilibrium until Mercury turns retrograde at the end of August. Because the flip occurs in Virgo, a compatible earth sign, it won't be a big deal, except for travel plans. Even adjusting your current schedule to accommodate your partner's social agenda shouldn't divert your attention from whatever pastime entertains you this summer.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Dazzled, deluded or just daydreaming? Vague, vaporous Neptune in your sign is getting a lot of play from the planets in Leo right now. If you're a musician, dancer or magician you won't mind having bright-eyed, bushy-tailed enthusiasts looking at you. But if you're into quasi-legal stuff, scandal or spin-doctoring, all that attention could blow your cover. Classic Aquarian-type heroes, such as Robin Hood and Lady Godiva, with their strong sense of social responsibility and love of the spotlight, should have a field day.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

Read for Aquarius. Again, it's your Neptune ruler setting the tone for both signs, so you're likely to find that, right now, you're tied to the Water Bearer in subtle, somewhat mystical ways. Although you might not be in the forefront of sociopolitical reform, like the Lady of the Lake and Merlin you're a hero in your own right, a somewhat invisible yet powerful force for change. However, that cloak of invisibility might drop while the Leo sun and Venus focus on Pluto in your career/reputation midheaven.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

It's playtime, big-time. Over the next few weeks, while the optimistic Leo sun, lucky Jupiter and romantic Venus are passing through your house of fun and games, feel free to frolic to your heart's content. With so much positive planetary energy reinforcing your innate sense of adventure, you'd be a freak of nature if you turned down a chance to have big fun. Or to win big money. Or, for that matter, to spread it around. Besides, while your Mars ruler is retrograde, reflecting on past behavior, you won't see much forward progress.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

Entertaining on a grand scale, dressing to the nines, doing a star turn for an ever-widening audience—these are a few of the perks being offered while your Venus ruler travels through luxurious Leo. Although you usually have a blast during the goddess' annual summer tour, this year the Bull gets extra benefits from having jolly, generous Jupiter in Leo as well. Not for another 12 years will you be encouraged to make such sweeping plays, hog as much of the spotlight or show how imperious and magnanimous you can be.

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

Gemini's chances of making serious money right now are excellent; so are the odds you'll spend it to satisfy your partner or outfox the competition. Your Mercury ruler's passage through earthy Virgo should bolster the Twins' practical, rational side; instead, it might make you hell-bent on proving your point. Meanwhile, Mercury's forward march may also increase your antsiness—the itch to be somewhere else, drive something else or change your zip code entirely. Patience wears thin, harsh words are exchanged. Watch it.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

While other signs can relax this summer, go on vacation or take long weekends out of town, cosmic forces are urging Crabs to come up with dramatic and entertaining ways to upgrade their lifestyle. It can't be helped. Because both Jupiter and Venus, the planets that bring "good fortune," as well the creative sun, are in your Leo money house, easy opportunities to rake it in can suddenly surround you. This window won't stay open much longer—Venus moves into shy, retiring Virgo on the 22nd, and Jupiter follows on the 27th.

Central air conditioning for homes with hot water or steam radiator heat.

If a home doesn't have forced air heat, installing ductwork for central air conditioning can mean major remodeling and expense. But a Unique Indoor Comfort® system doesn't require large metal ductwork, or major remodeling.

Cool air is delivered through small 2" flexible tubing that can easily be weaved through walls and ceilings, around studs and other obstacles. All that's visible are small round outlets in every room. What's more, Unique Indoor Comfort® offers Lennox high efficiency air conditioning.

Proven in thousands of homes, easy to install Unique Indoor Comfort® is the central air conditioning solution for the older home.

LAST SCENE HERE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

At Saks in the City, top: a pile of Guccis, Manolos and Jimmy Choos. Upper middle: Drew Martin and Nora Ferguson; Bill Emery and Dan Mathieu; Mario Russo. Lower middle: Juan Prieto; Sheryl Marshall and Jill Medvedow show off their matching Issey Miyake purchases; Larry Post and Stamatis Astras. Bottom: Heather Unruh; Lynne Aronson and Jeannie Flynn.

NOBLESSE OBLIGE, AND CHARGE IT, PLEASE...

The seemingly contradictory mottoes of "Give till it hurts" and "Shop till you drop" came together nicely at Saks in the City—an evening of dramatically discounted shopping at Saks Fifth Avenue that raised money for five local charities.

Needless to say, knowing that one's purchases would benefit a worthwhile cause made it that much easier to splurge with reckless abandon, as 2 percent of each sale went to the AIDS Action Committee, the American Heart Association, the Institute of Contemporary Art or the Wang Center for the Performing Arts. (Buyers specified their charity of choice, and the organization that received the highest percentage of total sales from the evening received the added boon of a fashion benefit hosted by Saks this fall.)

Spotted indulging in some serious retail therapy: such fashion plates and clothes horses as banking babe Alison Bibbins Ward of Mellon; TV news glamazon Heather Unruh of Channel 5; hair deity Mario Russo; nightlife chatelaine Diane Mantouvalos of Saint (where everyone went later to toast their bargains or drink away their buyer's remorse); gallery owner Jim Smith; dreadlocked jewelry designer Drew Martin; bowtied hipster Robin Lincoln; the alarmingly handsome Bill Emery; foodie superhero Dan Mathieu; the fairy godfather of real estate, Dan Mullin; venture capitalist Sheryl Marshall and ICA director Jill Medvedow (who bought matching blue Issey Miyake numbers); Greek tycoon Stamatis Astras; Amex financial adviser bigwig Larry Post; Boston's newest NY import, chef extraordinaire Lynne Aronson; blue-eyed playboy and scratch golfer Jay Gordon; a woman who said, "I'm pregnant, but I'm still buying shoes" and a man who grabbed a glass of champagne from the bar and said, "OK, now it's time for a credit card workout."

Other comments overheard during the course of the evening:

"I'll meet you in better handbags," and "The security guards better keep an eye on me—Winona and I go way back."

However, the sauciest comment came from a gay man who looked at the Michael Kors pants his friend was contemplating buying and said, "Those'll make you look big...and not in the right places."

NO USE CRYING OVER SPILLED MERLOT...

OK, pop quiz: The Art of July refers to:

A) maximizing one's time at the beach

B) eating as many cherries as possible without puking

C) a gigantic silent auction of work by local artists to raise money for the Children's Trust Fund.

If you picked C, chances are you were in the rooftop ballroom of the Omni Parker House for the 10th annual summertime fund-raiser. If so, you were toe-to-toe with the likes of the event's founder, Randace Moore; PR princess Kate Shamon; the ubiquitous Zvi Cole; male model in training Gene Goldman; Indian gadfly Amit Kanodia; the fiercely fabulous Evelyn Nellum; gregarious investment banker Robert White; congenial couple Jenn Goff Barry and her husband, John; interior designer and Dudley Do-Right doppelganger Duncan Hughes; the always affable Jeff Popkin; hairstylist extraordinaire Albert Julian; improbably tall artist Christopher Ellsworth; headhunter (and daughter of baseball Hall of Famer Jim) Jamie Palmer; fiery fashion plate Lisa Rebello; world-famous photographer Cheryl Richards; stand-up comic and man-of-a-thousand-voices Bob Gautreau and his boyfriend, the artist continually known as Brian Patrick Adams; sassy advertising chick Jannine Fonte-Hathaway; and one person who downed a vodka and tonic and said, "I sucked that drink down like I just got out of rehab."

Memo to the guy who made a noticeable, loud fuss about the glass of wine that accidentally got spilled: Going to a party means running the risk of getting a stain on your clothing, and there was no need to throw such an ungracious hissy fit. In fact, it actually did your girlfriend a favor, since that dress made her look like she' d been badly upholstered. P.S. Any decent dry cleaner nowadays can remove a minor red wine stain from a pair of khakis, and if not, you should just look at it as the (abstract) art of July.

At The Art of July, from top: Lisa Rebello; Matthew Rushford; Kate Shamon and Anja Kola; Jenn Goff Barry, Christopher Ellsworth and John Barry; Gene Goldman, Lori Sullivan and Rob White. Bottom: Evelyn Nellum and Doug Nahigian; Zvi Cole.

FROM THE EDITOR

STYLE FORECAST

Though shops and department stores around Boston are laying on the wool, and outerwear is creeping in where bathing suits recently staked a claim, I've turned a blind eye to that dark, heavy stuff with eyes only for the summer sale section. Soon, however, even those last racks of summer leftovers will vanish, and undeniable signposts like shorter, cooler days and the closing of the Colonnade's rooftop pool will force us all to address the matter of our fall wardrobes.

Lucky for us, the IMPROPER's fashion editor, Samantha House, has overcome her own Florida-native fear of cold weather and the clothes that go with it. She spent the past few months visiting designer showrooms and talking to boutique owners about what will be in style this fall, and we've packed this issue with the results of her research. In these pages, you'll find information on the clothing styles, fabrics, accessories, shoes, beauty products and the color that will be in vogue this fall—all accompanied by pretty photos that will inspire you to hit the stores.

Earning this issue's good-sport award, cover boy Jay Mohr spent a few hours bouncing on a trampoline in a hotel ballroom for the men's fashion photo shoot (pages 32-36). Those striking images, and all the gorgeous fall clothes in this issue, might even have you looking forward to the cooler weather.

THE $184,000 QUESTION

I'd like to know if Daniel Schulman has ever actually priced out homes in East Boston ("The Real (Estate) Deal," Aug. 13). I'm a lifelong resident of East Boston and would love to continue living there but the houses are out of reach! Schulman reports that the average single-family home in East Boston is $184,000. Where?! Not even the condemned properties are that cheap!

—ANNA ALETA C.
East Boston

Editor's Note: The $184,000 figure (actually the median price, not the average) came from the City of Boston Department of Neighborhood Development's mid-year report for the year 2002, the most recent report available at press time. The just-released 2002 Annual Report gives a median of $187,500 for East Boston. You can view the report at www.cityofboston.gov. Search for "Boston real estate trends."

JAMAICA COMPLAIN

Just want to back up Emily Donahue of JP's letter in the Aug. 13 issue—not about the "unimaginative" writing of your Boston's Best issue (July 23)—I enjoyed the writing. But for sure Jamaica Plain was so missing. JP is paradise, and has many great boutiques and restaurants. But maybe we'd prefer it if people didn't come around and we could have it all to ourselves. They have enough to occupy them in the Back Bay, Beacon Hill, South End, etc.—in other words, swank/chichi land. I prefer real people, real diversity and everything else JP has to offer.

—JEN HODSON
Jamaica Plain

A TRUE AFICIONACHO

I can't explain how psyched I was when I realized that there was a best nacho category in your Boston's Best issue. I'm a nacho fan, and my love has become an obsession (sadly, I'm not kidding). Some co-workers and I have spent the last year rating Boston's nachos—I've even developed a Web site devoted to the best and worst nachos. In my opinion, although the Coolidge Corner Clubhouse does have very tasty nachos, the best nachos in Boston are at the Black Rhino (yeah—who'd have guessed?). They really are fabulous—cheesy, crunchy, ample toppings piled high—and I've eaten a lot of nachos. (At least once a week for the past year! Impressive, if you ask me.)

—TINA RIZZITANO
Brookline

BOOKS ON VIDEOTAPE

I couldn't agree more with Paul Sherman's thoughts concerning the failure of movies that are based on books to measure up to the original versions (Seabiscuit review, Aug. 13). I'm reminded of the tale of two goats, chewing on old discarded film on an MGM lot. One goat asks his companion, "How is it?" The other goat replies, "It's good, but not as good as the book."

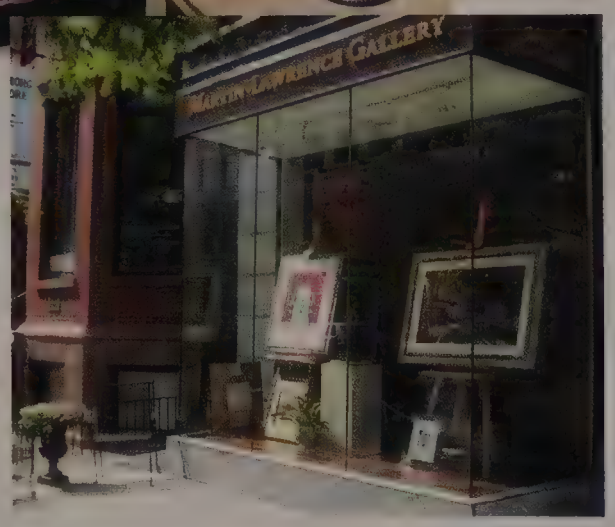
ARTISTIC ENDEAVORS

The first thing you should know about the new Martin Lawrence gallery on Newbury Street is that it has nothing whatsoever to do with the comedian. In fact, there's nothing funny at all about this swank space—we're talking serious high art. The gallery is named after original partners Martin Blinder and Lawrence Ross, who started the first Martin Lawrence in a shopping mall about 30 years ago. Now there are 11 branches around the country. Current owner David Rogath bought the franchise six years ago and opened this Boston location Aug. 5 with the gallery's signature selection of works by modern masters, namely Picasso, Lichtenstein, Warhol and Chagall.



The Rogath team scouted Boston locations for three years before finding this one—an expansive, multilevel space measuring a whopping 3,500 square feet. When you see the 300-odd paintings (ranging in price from $400 to $1 million) hanging amid the intricate ornamental architectural work, it's hard not to wonder how a gallery this big has the gumption to open on Newbury Street when so many Newbury institutions—among them, the Dyansen Gallery—have gone out of business. Gallery director Sher Fox says, "It's all you hear about these days—which places are closing. [This gallery] is a shot in the arm for Boston."

The gallery's unique features include two mini living rooms, where you can place a painting on a wall, sit back on a couch and view the painting while varying the brightness of the lights. "You can imagine how it would look in your house morning, noon and night," says Fox. If a browser would like to learn more about a painting or an artist before sealing the deal, there's a media station with videos about many of the works. "If you're going to have a piece of art for the rest of your life, you really want to know everything about it," Fox adds. Finally, while you're checking out Warhol's giant Mick Jagger painting (signed by both the artist and subject), your kids can amuse themselves at the coloring station upstairs.

If you can't make the opening party on Sept. 20, you'll certainly have a chance to check out the gallery another time. Whereas most local galleries take a siesta during August and are rarely open Mondays, Martin Lawrence is open until 9 pm Mon.–Sat. and 11am–7 pm on Sundays. 77 Newbury St., Boston (617-369-4800). —Erin Hagedorn and Julie Suratt

TRASHY FASHION

A few weeks ago, I bumped into two men wearing the slogans "Wicked Pissah" and "Everything You'll Never Have" on their T-shirts. Turns out the shirts' designer is Boston-based and a friend of the twosome. Erin Wallace creates the cheeky T's with 250 amusing phrases like "A Guaranteed Good Time," "Beer Me," "Boozebag," "Don't Flatter Yourself" and "Closet Nice Guy." The combination of 100 percent cotton and '70s-style velvet and embroidered applique lettering strikes the perfect balance of tongue-in-cheek with retro style. 617-851-3976, or theshertjerk@hotmail.com. $15-$20.—Samantha House

THE NEW FIXER-UPPER

After a successful debut season, TLC's While You Were Out, the home makeover show with heart, returns to the tube with 60 new episodes and a brand new host. Along with his boyish good looks, newcomer Evan Farmer brings experience in front of the camera (he had a small part in Austin Powers in Goldmember and has guest-hosted MTV's TRL), plus some knowledge of architecture, to the crew of comely carpenters (namely Andrew Dan-Jumbo) and designers. The cast recently came to Boston to redesign the State House office of Shawn Feddeman, Governor Mitt Romney's press secretary. While there, Farmer, 31, took a few minutes to chat with the IMPROPER about his new job.

IB: This is quite a departure from appearing in Austin Powers and TRL. How did you decide to apply for this job?

EF: This is right up my alley. I went to architecture school for a couple of years and I've done carpentry. I really like working with my hands, so this job is the best of both worlds.

IB: Did you encounter any major problems while working on Boston's State House?

EF: Our main fear was that [the press secretary] was going to come back to work. She is such a devoted worker that we couldn't get her to leave.

IB: Did Mitt Romney make an appearance on the set or lend a hand in the project?

EF: He did come in, and he was hilarious. I got the impression he likes a good prank. We had him call her and ask her to come in to the office.

IB: Did you get to go out in Boston at all?

EF: We went to the Union Oyster House. That's where I met up with the press secretary. And we went crazy on our night off.

IB: What were your favorite areas or buildings in the city?

EF: I got a kick out of Beacon Hill. It was nice and quaint and with the Big Dig going on, it was nice to have a sanctuary to hang out in.

IB: Are there any celebrities in store for the show this season?

EF: There's a lot more people who want to get involved. We did the house of Washington Redskin LaVar Arrington's brother. We have a couple more celebrities in store that we can't publicize yet or we'll get busted.

IB: Does Andrew get flocked by women at every location?

EF: Andrew gets flocked by women; Leslie gets flocked by men. I've been enjoying anonymity, but I've only got another week before the series airs and then it's all over. For now, it's really fun because I can just stand back and watch from the sidelines while they get attacked, literally.

SMOKIN'

Smokey Fireplace...Adding nonedibles to a restaurant's menu might not seem like the brightest idea—especially when the nonedibles are cigars and the city is smoke-free. But Jim Solomon (right), chef/owner of Brookline's the Fireplace, doesn't care. He added Red Sox legend Luis Tiant's line of Cuban-style cigars to the Fireplace's stock about a month ago. "Luis Tiant is such a hometown favorite that I thought it would be an appropriate and fun thing to do," says Solomon. Don't miss El Tiante Night on Sept. 9, when Tiant himself will make an appearance. Cigar rollers, hot Cuban appetizers, live Cuban music and a one-night-only outdoor smoking lounge are part of the festivities. In the spirit of good times, Solomon says, "Don't call, just come and party." 1634 Beacon St., Brookline (617-975-1900).

Ming Goes Public...Wellesley's own Ming Tsai, chef/owner of celebrated Blue Ginger and host of the Food Network's East Meets West, is wrapping things up on network television and making the jump to public TV for his third televised cooking show, Simply Ming. Tsai describes the series, based on his book by the same title due out in October, as "East Meets West simplified." Each of the 26 episodes features a cooking demo and an appearance by a guest chef, including Todd English, Jasper White, Ana Sortun and Tsai's parents. "I've always wanted to do public television," says Tsai. "I grew up watching Julia and the gang on public TV, and if we can get people to cook East/West food at home, that would be awesome." Simply Ming premieres on WGBH 2 Channel 2 on Oct. 4.

Fast Food...Sifting through outdated menus and rounding up orders from a dozen employees for lunch meetings is now a thing of the past. Vmeals online catering service, launched in early August, handles all the dirty work involved in planning the dining component of business functions. Customers can log onto the Web site and choose from 15 local restaurants and caterers and the service can e-mail a menu to all attendees to collect orders. Once entered, Vmeals tracks everything to ensure food arrives on time, at the same time. Right now, participating restaurants include Bangkok Blue, Genarro's Italian Kitchen, India Samraat and Max's Deli Café...and the list keeps growing. www.vmeals.com.—E.H., J.I. and J.S.

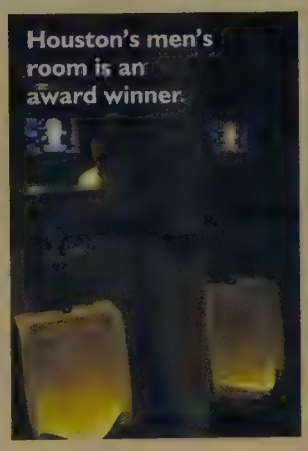
Sneak Peak...Since we blew the lid on the men's bathroom at Houston's in our Boston's Best issue (we gave it Best Bathroom), it seems the fairer sex has been eager to get a look. A spokesperson for Houston's reports that GM Jeff Palermo has caught more than a handful of ladies peeking at the men's loo. Apparently, the standard drill requires one woman to stand guard while the others attempt to gain entrance. Once sighted by Palermo, they hide in the women's room until they think the coast is clear. The official tour is offered upon reemergence but usually declined with bashful smiles and averted eyes.



Aw, Shucks...To dine at Jasper White's Cambridge Summer Shack is to dine in the presence of greatness—not just because of the award-winning cuisine, but also because of the talents of award-winning oyster and clam shucker Tien Van Tran. The Massachusetts state—and Northeast regional—champion is currently training for the National Oyster Shucking Championship Oct. 18 and 19 in Maryland, and his daily training regimen includes speed-shucking 600-800 oysters and clams, as well as doing 100 pushups. If all goes well in Maryland, the Vietnam native is looking at a spot in the World Shucking Championship in Galway, Ireland.

Westward, Ho!...Boston isn't exactly the open range. Cowboy boots are about as scarce as a real celebrity in this town. Western- and rockabilly-inspired gear have had even less of a presence in town since Walker's Riding Apparel closed its doors after 70 years on Boylston Street in June 2002. But now the one-of-a-kind shop—packed with unique memorabilia such as antique movie posters and photographs of former customers, including Roy Rogers—is making a comeback of sorts. Rick Murphy, Walker's former GM, and his girlfriend, Rachel Walsh, will open Rick Walker's downtown in late August. An abundant selection of cowboy boots, Stetson hats, belt buckles, vintage rockabilly shorts and motorcycle apparel lines the shelves, and much of the original decor of photos and collectibles has been restored. If nothing else, it's a refreshing alternative to polos and Nantucket Reds. 21 Temple Place, Boston (617-482-7426).

Wild West 47th...Newton native Bill Lichtenstein and his wife, June Peoples, recently completed West 47th Street, an ambitious documentary that chronicles four people's battle with mental illness over the course of three years at New York's Fountain House rehab center. Lichtenstein has some personal experience with his film's topic, as his own battles with depression cost him his career in TV news. West 47th Street airs Sept. 2 at 9 pm on WGBH Channel 44.

A Giant Help...For many renters and students, the approaching Labor Day weekend will actually require hard labor. Sept. 1 is not only a national holiday, but also the busiest moving day of the year in Boston. In the name of easing the pain of one- or two-person moving crews struggling to hoist beds and sofas up narrow flights of stairs, Gentle Giant is offering a Crisis Crew (free of charge) to assist movers in the Back Bay, Beacon Hill, Charlestown, Fenway, the North End, the South End, and the Waterfront Aug. 31 and Sept. 1. Calls will be handled on a first-come, first-served basis; individuals must provide their own moving vehicle and the crew is limited to 30 minutes and a maximum of three items per location. Hotline hours are 11:30 am–7:30 pm Sunday and Monday (617-806-1036).

BOOK A COOK

You could get used to having a personal chef

Cooking is a fine idea. In practice, however, it never really works out for me. Consider a recent foray into the world of culinary improvisation, wherein I attempted to customize a jar of spaghetti sauce with a dollop of Dave's Insanity Sauce. The next morning I put in my first contact lens and my eye began tearing like I was Tammy Faye Bakker. Apparently there must have been a trace of hot sauce on my finger, because the insanity was in my eye. I went to work looking like I'd been maced, which was preferable to what happened when I tried to make home fries and ended up getting stitches in the emergency room because I inadvertently added my hand to the recipe. I should give up cooking for a less dangerous pastime, like skydive chainsaw juggling.

But a guy's got to eat. What I need, you're probably saying, is a personal chef (and a bodyguard and a posse, but let's take one thing at a time). Luckily, soon after the insanity incident I got a call from Karen Fabian, proprietor of The Main Dish, a local personal-chef service. Fabian's mission is to take the aggravation out of keeping yourself fed—and to do it with stuff that's tastier and better for you than the grog you'd cook for yourself.

Never one to turn down free food, I signed up for a few meals to try living the PC life. On the menu: pork and pineapple skewers with peanut sauce over basmati rice, Italian meatloaf with smashed potatoes, Cornish game hens with rosemary roasted potatoes, and chocolate ricotta muffins and blueberry pie.

One morning before I left for work Fabian arrived carrying pots, pans, knives and enough cooking-related hardware to make Williams-Sonoma look like the KFC spork bin. However, my kitchen served up one challenge for which she wasn't prepared: the jalopy oven. Long ago our stove's knobs succumbed to oven leprosy and fell off. Since the temperature scale was on the oven knob, you'd need Lorenzo Lamas and a laser pointer to know how hot your turkey is. Fabian looked at the bare metal shafts sticking out of my oven and said resignedly, "I guess I just expected there to be knobs."

I left for work soon after Fabian set up her supplies and began making the pie. When I returned home that night, there was an array of carefully labeled plastic containers in my fridge. On the counter was a printout detailing the nutritional information of each dish, and my stove and counter were also much cleaner than they'd been when she arrived that morning. Fabian left a note explaining that she'd used some downtime while things were cooking to straighten up the work area. I get the idea that if Fabian ran Bechtel, not only would the Big Dig be done right now, it would include a North-South rail link, which she would've built while she was waiting for some concrete to set in the Central Artery.

I'm not a food writer, but I did find that the meatloaf's tender nuttiness was an ideal contrast to the creamy texture of the smashed potatoes, while the steamed basil leaf in repose atop the beef's restrained layer of tangy tomato sauce offered a visual as well as gastronomic garnish—not always the case with the latest trompe l'oeil school of culinary embellishment, which often amounts to little more than the illusion of lemon zest. I done ate the whole darn thang faster'n an ornery coon hound treein' a possum!

FABIAN ARRIVED CARRYING ENOUGH COOKING-RELATED HARDWARE TO MAKE WILLIAMS-SONOMA LOOK LIKE THE KFC SPORK BIN

The rest of the dishes were also delicious, which is particularly impressive given that they were culled from health-food magazines (Fabian is also a yoga instructor, and the food fits in with that whole mind-body wellness thing). Even better than the food, however, was the fact that I didn't have to do anything except throw it in the microwave. I didn't have to shop, cook, clean or go through the drudgery of putting on pants when the delivery guy shows up. This is what I've been missing since I moved out of my parents' house—I don't really want convenience, I want someone to take care of me.

The cost for a six-serving package (two servings of three entrees) is $180, and I'm in danger of becoming a regular. The way I look at it, having a personal chef is more expensive than ordering a pizza, but far cheaper than a trip to the emergency room. iB

DAVID MUIR

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

For the past three years, David Muir has appeared on WCVB-TV (Channel 5) as a reporter and weekend anchor. Born and raised in Syracuse, N.Y., he studied broadcast journalism at Ithaca College and graduated magna cum laude. He also studied European politics and Spanish at the University of Salamanca in Spain and attended the Institute on Political Journalism at Georgetown University. He began his broadcasting career at WTVH-TV, the CBS affiliate in Syracuse, where he spent five years as anchor and reporter, receiving numerous awards and accolades. He joined WCVB in May 2000, and was part of the investigative team that won the regional Edward R. Murrow award, a National Headliner award, and Associated Press honors for its work tracing the path of the Sept. 11 terrorists. This past March, he was the only television reporter from Boston covering the war in Iraq from Qatar, providing live reports for Channel 5 and Hearst-Argyle stations nationwide. Muir, 29, was recently named anchor and correspondent for ABC News' overnight broadcasts, World News Now and World News This Morning. He moved to Tribeca and began his new job with the network on August 11.

David Muir reports from Boston's Copley Square during NewsCenter 5's local, live coverage.

Jonathan Soroff: Tell the truth: Did you have to sleep with Barbara Walters to land your new job?
David Muir: I never kiss and tell.
JS: How do you plan to sabotage Peter Jennings' career so you can have his spot?
DM: Sitting in Peter Jennings' chair is a frightening thought. For me, it's a dream to work in the same newsroom as him.
JS: Who would you prefer to be compared to: Tom Brokaw or Ted Koppel?
DM: I think Brokaw is the Midwestern guy next door. People can relate to him as someone who was mowing his lawn just before he came on the air. Whereas Ted Koppel was with the Third Infantry, covering the war, a man who's done this for many years and is still out there in the trenches. In the end, I guess I'd have to choose Ted Koppel, because I'd like to have the kind of seasoning he has.
JS: Would you slit your wrists if someone compared you to Geraldo Rivera?
DM: Geraldo's done some pretty spectacular things in his career.
JS: Spectacularly stupid, you mean?
DM: OK, let's just say I hope my career path is a little different than his.

JS: How old were you when you knew you wanted to work in TV news?
DM: When I was 12, I wrote to the local anchor in Syracuse, Ron Curtis, asking what I needed to do to prepare myself for a job like his. I waited by that mailbox every day, and sure enough, he wrote back, saying, "Read the newspapers. Read them out loud. Learn as much as you can about everything." He gave me a couple of colleges and universities to consider. And the last line of his letter said, "The competition in television news is keen, but there's always room for the right person. It could be you."

> TO BE A GOOD BROADCASTER, YOU HAVE TO BE AN EXCELLENT WRITER. YOU HAVE TO BE ABLE TO WRITE CONCISE, CONVERSATIONAL STORIES, AND OFTEN YOU HAVE TO DO IT VERY, VERY QUICKLY.

JS: Wow. Where would you be without Ron Curtis?
DM: There's more to the story. After he wrote to me, I corresponded with other people in the newsroom, begging to be an intern, which they found laughable, because I was only 12. But they finally decided to let me do it. So I was carrying the tripods, going out on stories…
JS: What did your friends think of all that?
DM: What do you think?
JS: That you were a total dork.
DM: There you go. But I had a growth chart on the newsroom wall, where they'd measure how much taller I'd gotten since the last school vacation. They joked that as my height increased, my voice would drop a notch. And 10 years after Ron Curtis wrote me that letter, I was sharing his chair on the anchor desk, doing the 5 o'clock news.
JS: Biggest on-air faux pas?
DM: The story about a St. Louis Cardinals pitcher who died of a heart attack at a very young age, and I said, "Dr. Timothy Johnson joins us now with a medical perspective. Doctor Tim, this is such a heartbreaker." I just wanted to disappear behind my desk.
JS: Biggest story you ever covered?
DM: The war in Iraq, because I was over there, on my own.
JS: Biggest non-story?
DM: Well, I was in Qatar for a month. I come back and debrief with Natalie Jacobson about my experience covering the war in the Middle East, and I go from doing that at 6 o'clock to doing a story on the 11 o'clock about tainted Skittles at a pharmacy in Chelsea. Some people thought they'd been exposed to something that made them ill. All the emergency people on the scene were laughing. I went from gas masks in the Middle East to a bad bag of candy.
JS: What story affected you most deeply in an emotional sense?
DM: Sept. 11, of course, but the nightclub fire in Rhode Island really got to me too. The pictures from inside that club were the worst pictures I've ever seen as a reporter.
JS: Do strangers expect you to know everything about current affairs?
DM: Of course. And I think we should know. That's what we do.
JS: One thing most people don't appreciate about TV news?
DM: The writing that's involved. To be a good broadcaster, you have to be an excellent writer. A lot of people watch the news and think you just show up and they hand you a script. You have to be able to write concise, conversational stories, and often you have to do it very, very quickly.
JS: Words that throw you off when you see them on the teleprompter?
DM: A lot of the place names in New England, like Lake Cochituate, or all those towns that end in "-ham," but with some the "h" is pronounced and others it's silent like Eastham or Dedham.
JS: Is it a good or a bad thing that most people get their news from TV?
DM: Well, for me, it's good, since it means that hopefully I'll have a long career. But I don't think it should be their sole source of news. Take a half-hour newscast, take the ad time out, and you're left with a pretty small news hole. If I'm out reporting in the field, I might be given a minute and a half for a story. That's not a heck of a lot of time, and I'd think people would want to know more.
JS: CNN or Fox?
DM: ABC.
JS: How will you get used to your weird new hours? Crystal meth, maybe?
DM: [Laughs.] I haven't thought about it but I guess there'll probably be some sort of caffeine IV under the desk. It's going to be a major adjustment.
JS: If you could have any trademark sign-off, what would it be?
DM: I wouldn't. I think they're kinda hokey.
JS: Does the camera really add 10 pounds?
DM: I think it does add weight. Y'know, my hair's not really as big as it looks on TV.
JS: One adjective that describes David Muir?
DM: Just one?
JS: Yup.
DM: Dedicated. IB

FALL FASHION

When I first moved to Boston from Florida, I dreaded the coming of fall. I was in love with summer's pretty pastels, body-bar- g styles, and light, airy fabrics. The thought of fall's dark col- , bulky knits and the mountains of snow that would soon in every nice pair of shoes I held dear hurled me into a pre- ll wardrobe depression. Unable to make myself go out and y boring suits and sweaters, I wore my warm-weather lothes throughout my first fall in Boston. I was in complete enial. After a few winters here, however, I've learned to ope, and this year I've even caught myself looking forward to t first hint of crispness in the air so I can go on a monthlong hopping spree for the season's gorgeous treasures. There's much to get excited about in this fall's array of beautiful extures, fabrics, accessories and colors.

Furs are in again, much to the chagrin of animal rights roups. If purchasing and wearing real fur bothers you, opt for faux versions (they're also easier on the wallet) that will available in stores in about a month. The fur collar is the ost popular accessory for men and women this fall—wrap it round a tweed jacket to glam up your look. Neiman Marcus ready has several doughnut-shaped furs that you slip over our head to create a funnel-neck collar.

For the mod look, another strong trend this season, pair vi- ant colors like yellow, blue, orange or green with black and hite. Solid colors worn together make a big impact. Pick an l-black outfit and add the hottest of all trends this fall— bove-the-knee stockings and tights, like the ones featured on age 39. (You can find inexpensive above-the-knee stockings at rden B, or head to the Chanel boutique for a sumptuous ather version.)

Menswear-inspired looks are also huge for women this fall. hink tailored at the waist for a flattering silhouette, like the suit rom DKNY on page 27. You'll see men's tailoring in coats oo—the newest styles look like a man's coat that has been nched in the back to reveal a smaller waist. Look for fabrics e tweed or wool and pair these pieces with satin or silk for a odern, feminine twist. This design trend for women echoes e popularity of suits among men, who've been dressing more onservatively in recent seasons.

Women's shoes are ultra girly this year. The two strongest ends are bright colors like the hot-pink pumps on page 42 nd 1940s-style heels in every color. If you're daring enough, ick up a pair of above-the-knee boots that will add sex appeal almost anything you wear. Bags—either sparkly clutches for ening or crocodile bags for daytime—have gone smaller this eason. For accessories, try large necklaces or dozens of racelets to top off a sophisticated, high-society look.

Whether you prefer girly, suave, sexy or romantic, there's lenty in this issue—from the latest trends, colors, shoes, bar- ains, hairstyles and menswear—to inspire your next shopping rip. Have fun with fashion and embrace the coming cooler onths. If I learned to do it, you can too. —Samantha Hoi

FIVE EASY STEPS TO REVEAL YOUR INNER GLAMAZON

BY SAMANTHA HOUSE

Many of us feel like glamorous stars on the inside, but when it comes to our outward style we play it safe. If this sounds familiar, it might be time for a star-style makeo
Following these simple steps can give you the boost you need to turn yourself into a hottie worthy of the red-carpet treatment.

The model: When Jeanie Flynn, founder of Jeanie Flynn PR and an up-and-coming jazz-singing diva, came to us, she looked pretty. But we wanted to see more of her sexy side and add some color to her look.

First stop: G Spa for a manicure and pedicure with Celina. Opting to keep Jeanie's fingernails short to suit her active lifestyle, Celina trims, buffs and polishes Jeanie's nails to perfection. She chooses a vibrant red to add a "pop" of color to her fingers and toes. $45 for manicure and pedicure.

Second stop: Exclusive Skin Solutions for teeth whitening with Josh. It takes only an hour, and when Jeanie is done, she has bright white teeth. Remember, you can't be a "stah" without a game-show-host smile. $275.

Third stop: Gretta Cole Salon for a color, cut and style with Jeffrey. He cuts some much needed layers into Jeanie's hair and adds some life with honey highlights. For a sleek look, Jeffrey smooths her hair with a flattening iron. $220.

Fourth stop: Sephora for smoky eyes a glossy lips. Sephora's Paige chooses Stil cosmetics for Jeanie because there are many fun colors to play with. Paige star with light foundation to even out Jeanie skin tone. Then she adds heavy eyeline and smoky shadow around the eyes, a finishes off with shiny lips for the siren look. Makeovers are complimentary. Appointment recommended.

Final stop: Jeanie's closet for a dres already owns but never though would wear. Vintage BCBG. It' long and just her (new)

Jay Mohr is always on. From the moment he showed up at the fashion shoot, he was hamming it up from one end of the room to the other, reciting bits of his act and past performances. With him, he brought his tour manager and right-hand man, Walter Gause, and the two played off of each other in a way that reminded me of a modern Abbott and Costello. Counting the photographer and the hairstylist, the room was full of testosterone—and me. The guys recited their favorite lines from movies like The Godfather and Caddyshack and spent free time in between shots air-boxing and comparing their form. It was a study in how boys become men and then boys again.

It's no wonder that Mohr is loving his life right now. His career has seen the usual ups and downs, but at 33 years old, he's been blessed with his first child (with his wife of six years, Nicole Chamberlain) and high ratings for Last Comic Standing, a show he produced and hosted on NBC during the summer.

Mohr started his career as a teenager performing standup at colleges and clubs—wherever they would have him. His standup career took off in Boston, and as word of his talent spread he gained national recognition and did a two-year stint on Saturday Night Live, where he became frustrated when he didn't get much airtime. Many people saw him for the first time in the 1996 movie Jerry Maguire, in which he played an obnoxious agent who fires his mentor. From there, he went on to play a too-nice guy who wins the heart of Jennifer Aniston in 1997's Picture Perfect. In addition to appearing in numerous films since then, Mohr has hosted an ESPN show called Mohr Sports. Nowadays, he's traveling, performing on his "Filthy Clean Tour" while looking forward to a new season of Last Comic Standing. He still appears regularly in Boston at the Comedy Connection.

As with any actor who has played so many different characters, you wonder which one is most like the real him. "I'm probably most like Brett in Suicide Kings. He was a prick but he was loyal." he says. "He was the only one of the guys that never wavered from the original plan to help his friend. Everyone else jumped ship, but Brett stayed loyal."

Speaking of jumping, for our Fall Fashion issue, Mohr proved a good sport, agreeing to bounce up and down on a trampoline in the ballroom of a New York hotel for three hours as we photographed him in four different outfits. I asked him about his take on fashion.

Samantha House: How would you describe your personal clothing style?
Jay Mohr: I'm pretty laid back with T-shirts and jeans but I like to rock a suit every once in a while.
SH: Who's your favorite designer?
JM: Donna Karan. Her suits fit me without being tailored, plus she was the first person to give me free stuff.
SH: What one item of clothing can you not live without?
JM: Definitely blue jeans.
SH: What's the sexiest thing a woman can wear?
JM: No makeup and see-through panties.

ON STYLE

GREEN: THE SEASON'S HOTTEST COLOR

While it rained this spring and summer, designers helped us fight off the gloom with an onslaught of pastel-colored clothing. The most popular color in the trend palette was pink. Vibrant color is going to stick around for the fall, and as the weather cools, look for a new mood-lifting hue: green. It has been winking at us in shades of mint and kelly for the past three months, and it will only become more popular as the season changes.

Makeup companies have already unveiled green as their favorite color for eyeshadows, eyeliners and even mascara. I like MAC's Aquadisiac eyeshadow, and Tony & Tina's Herbal Eye Pencils in forest green and olive. You can either rim your eyes with the shades or sweep the colors over your upper and lower lids, adding black liner and mascara for a dramatic effect. Wear them only with light-colored lipstick to avoid the dreaded clownish look.

As for clothing, every shade of green will soon be available. Neiman Marcus currently has wool coats and Asian-print green suits, with more coming in their fall lineup. On page 42 you'll find a pair of lime-green Nine West slingbacks that will surprise you by matching nearly everything in your closet. On the casual clothing front, Ralph Lauren has relaunched its classic polo shirts in six shades of green that look great with denim.

The easiest way for anyone to wear green, however, is in the form of accessories. Accent any blue, black, gold, plum or pink (my favorite) outfit with the couleur du jour. Jojo makes stackable sparkly bracelets with an alligator clasp, or try an array of glasses by Robert Marc or one of Marie Galvin's custom-made hats to top off the look. Any way you decide to wear the color of the season, you can bet that passersby will be green with envy.

TEAMMATES BECOME OPPONENTS WHEN BOSTON BREAKERS PLAYERS FROM FOUR COUNTRIES SQUARE OFF IN THE WOMEN'S WORLD CUP THIS FALL ile the mystery epidemic SARS wreaked havoc with orld travel and confounded doctors from Beijing to oronto this past spring, it dropped a nifty prize in the aps of New England soccer fans: The Women's World up, originally scheduled to be played in China, was oved to the United States and now features first-round nd quarterfinal matches at Gillette Stadium in Foxboro. hank you very much, FIFA.

BY EZRA DYER

Besides bringing the top female soccer players in the orld to Gillette, the schedule change also means that ocal soccer hooligans could get an in-person opportuity to watch the Boston Breakers' seven World Cup layers compete against one another at the international evel. In this year's tournament, Kristine Lilly, Kate Sorero and Angela Hucles fly the Stars and Stripes, tephanie Mugneret-Beghe boots the ball for France, agny Mellgren and Ragnhild Gulbrandsen lead the way or Norway and Karina LeBlanc protects the net for anada. So will knowing thine enemy be an advantage the Cup?

"I don't think so," says LeBlanc, gathered with her felw Breaker World Cuppers at BU's Nickerson Field after recent Breakers practice. "They're too unpredictable. If cheat left, they'll shoot right."

"Most of us play different positions, so we won't be directly competing against one another," adds Sobrero.

Differing positions, however, didn't prevent defender Sobrero and forward Gulbrandsen from mixing it up in international play a few years ago, before they became Breakers teammates. "Somebody called somebody a bitch," recalls Gulbrandsen, as Sobrero acknowledges the accusation by admitting that her trash talk actually may have been a little more severe than that. "You started it, though," she says.

"I'm nice," replies Gulbrandsen, who appears sorry only that she wasn't capable at the time of properly responding to Sobrero's verbal assault. "I didn't speak much English then," she says, "So all I could say back to her was 'No, you are a bitch!'"

If the U.S meets Norway (a strong possibility in the quarterfinal round), there is another, more memorable bit of bad blood between the teams: Norway's controversial gold medal in the 2000 Olympics. Mellgren and Gulbrandsen both figured prominently in the outcome of the deciding game. First, Gulbrandsen scored the goal that tied the game and forced overtime. Then, in overtime, the ball came across the box, hit Mellgren's hand—or didn't, depending on whom you ask—and she booted it in for the gold. "They won that game on a questionable hand ball," says Sobrero. "But I'm over it," Lilly adds, feigning bitterness, though it's hard to tell if she's truly joking.

In order for a U.S.-Norway rematch to take place, however, the Americans will have to slug their way through the so-called group of death that they've drawn for the first round. Their first three opponents are Sweden, Sept. 21, at RFK Stadium in Washington, D.C.; Nigeria, Sept. 25, at Lincoln Financial Field in Philadelphia; and North Korea, Sept. 28, at Columbus Crew Stadium in Columbus, Ohio. Sweden is the fifth-ranked team in the world, Nigeria was the 2002 African Women's champion and North Korea is the 2003 Asian champion, having defeated China for the title three consecutive times. But assuming that the U.S. makes it past the first round, they'll face one of the top two teams from Group B—which includes Norway and France—in Foxboro Oct. 1. If that match-up occurs, will the bond forged over the course of 21 regular-season WUSA games cause the opposing Breakers teammates to treat their "friendly" adversaries any differently than a non-Breakers opponent? "I might say 'nice job,'" says Sobrero. iB

A HUNDRED YEARS OF SOLIDARITY

The Big House*, by George Howe Colt, chronicles life over a century at his family's Cape Cod summer house.

It's possible that a house, at least a much-loved, well-worn one, is possessed of something like a soul. Such a house existed for the extended clan of George Howe Colt, whose family branched from Boston's illustrious Forbeses. The huge, four-story shingle-style house on Buzzards Bay was the long-running center for this Brahmin brood who for a hundred years retreated there off-season to sail, play tennis, read books on the piazza and nurse the wounds of life.

Perched in a locale of distinct upper-class privilege, the house was a nest for complex family connections, with its spacious, beautiful wooded privacy, its gables and nooks and 11 bedrooms. It was also peeling, quirky, drafty, and uncomfortable, the antithesis of nouveau gentility. Colt, whose tone is swimmingly graceful, celebratory and sometimes melancholy, shows how deeply the house echoed the Colt family's contradictions and Brahmin style. Some family members, while certainly cultivated and intelligent, were also variously eccentric, depressed, puritanically stingy, maritally at odds or emotionally adrift. But the large embrace of the house lovingly contained it all. And Colt turns its threatened demise into a heart-grabbing tale of mystery.

ENTERTAINING ECLECTICA

Essentia, at the Mall at Chestnut Hill, sells artful, unusual small home furnishings and jewelry. Call 617-244-4468.

Essentia emanates originality and eccentricity here at this fanciest of malls, seeming more like a shop one would find in Harvard Square. You're greeted by the madcap whimsy of porcelain objects from the Bee's Knees, made by mother and daughter Linda and Miriam Aubry. Their creations include pitchers, crooked bird and bunny cups and droll teapots that seem to rest their hands, quizzically, on their flowered hips. Owner Victoria Wallins, restless for interesting variety—especially in items that are otherwise dully utilitarian—sells stylish lamps designed by Jill Rosenwald, plus some glass-based ones by Tracy Glover. Luisa Cevese Riedizioni's creations—raincoats, bags and placemats—are made of translucent greenish rubber, revealing lacy patterns inside. Both useful and attractive, they have a high-tech yet oddly delicate look. Former Bostonian John Derian uses decoupage and hortatory quotes with a sepia-shaded antique flavor ("Each moment spend to some good end") on everything from cake plates to paperweights. And Essentia can order felted wool rugs from Milan or get you a rocking chair covered in one of 40 fabrics.

THIRTY CARDS TO A HAPPIER YOU

Living Life is a card game that suggests 30 "life adventures." At Newbury Comics or at www.livinglifegame.com.

The good and the bad in life often just seem to tumble into reality by accident. You do what you do rutted into the ordained grooves of your schedule, necessity's slave. But the card game Living Life invites you to do things more deliberately, enhancing your own life and others' too. Each of the 30 cards proposes an activity. Sometimes it's a therapeutic and soul-cleansing suggestion, like apologizing to someone you've hurt. Or the card may instruct you to explore the high and low points of your life in search of stability and balance. Other cards invite you to consider talking to strangers, or to contact old friends who've become strangers and rekindle joys gone by. Some suggest adventure, stretching yourself into the wilder, bluer yonder. The cards get you researching, daydreaming, envisioning some personal Shangri-la, then going there. Some ingenious man, one card tells us, began selling waterproof watches by mail order. That venture became the Sharper Image. So dare to dream, o entrepreneurial one! Living Life, you might give blood, volunteer, bake a cake or just ponder the vividness of the present moment.

NEWTONVILLE NEWCOMER

Chef Christos Tsardounis' restaurant, Ariadne, pleases with well-prepared food, attentive service and an upscale setting

BY J. CHARLES MOKRISKI • PHOTOGRAPHS BY BERTA A. DANIELS

Many think of Newton as a suburban town. In fact, it is a city, with a surprisingly diverse population. Working- and middle-class neighborhoods lie north of the Mass. Pike and south of Route 9, bracketing more affluent residents in between. Newton also supports a level of commercial activity not found in a typical bedroom community.

As befits its status as a city, Newton is now home to a number of urbane, sophisticated restaurants. Skepticism greeted the arrival of Lumiere in West Newton a few years ago, but Michael and Jill Leviton's success in converting a former ice cream parlor into an upscale French eatery encouraged other gastronomic entrepreneurs. Lumiere was followed by Kouzina, where Nelson Cognac—with his refreshing and imaginative Mediterranean cuisine—took over space in the village of Waban that once housed a bakery. Then came wunderkind Mark Allen, who with Le Soir brought to Newton Highlands the creative flair and professionalism he had developed in the Napa Valley and later refined during a successful stint as executive chef of Boston's Ritz-Carlton.

Enter Ariadne in Newtonville, just off the Pike, rounding out a quartet of fine Continental eateries distributed among the dozen villages of Newton. Chef-owner Christos Tsardounis and his wife and partner, Kathleen Malloy, have turned what appeared to be a jinxed site on Walnut Street—three or four restaurants have come and gone at that address in a few years—into a popular, upscale eatery that draws patrons from well beyond Newton's borders. On any given evening, couples in search of a romantic interlude, families celebrating major life events and enthusiastic diners in search of good food and pleasant ambience can be found filling Ariadne's high-backed upholstered chairs and banquettes, basking in the glow of its Victorian shaded sconces and candles in heavy marble candleholders. Tones of beige, green and gold adorn the walls and continue in comely draperies that cover the storefront windows, shielding diners' eyes from less-exalted establishments across the street. Peach-rose hued woodwork moldings and cornices create a sumptuous environment. Three large square columns reach to the high ceiling, which is recessed to create an even greater impression of space.

Grilled squid with green olives, arugula and creamy hummus

Ariadne's menu is limited but varied enough to satisfy a broad range of palates, touching all the bases from seafood to poultry to meat. Appetizers included a duck confit ($9) with salty crisp skin and succulent flesh. A toothsome sauce of golden raisins, sliced plums and almond slivers created a kaleidoscope of tastes and textures: salty, sweet, tart, crisp, crunchy, tender. Only the tough stems of a gratuitous mound of watercress flawed the dish.

With the grilled squid ($9), chef Tsardou nis reached into his Mediterranean her itage and portfolio of flavors: Slices c small squid, at once silky and resilient, al most chewy, shared a small plate wit huge green olives, garlicky hummus, pleas antly bitter sautéed arugula, and fruit extra virgin olive oil and lemon. Th hauntingly smoky nuances of the squi complemented the warm, pungent flavo of the garnish, transporting me to a fondl remembered wedding I attended on windswept Aegean island.

Among Ariadne's main courses, th roasted chicken breast ($19), served wit crunchy green asparagus tips, tender art choke hearts and earthy, firm-texture mushrooms, was a winner. The "cor jus," a flavorful reduction of cookin juices, garlic and seductively aromat sage, rendered the accompanyin whipped potatoes delightful. Pan-seare Pacific halibut ($25) brought a generou thick filet of this delicate, white-fleshe fish, with firm texture and a tasty garnis of thin, crunchy asparagus, chanterel mushrooms and a mellow brandade- puréed fish mixed with potato—in a firs rate, light brown sauce. One evening, th kitchen displayed the grace and flexibi ity that is the soul of hospitality, obligin my request for a half portion of the ha ibut served as a fish course between th appetizer and meat. The final course tried was the pork chop ($21), the lea successful of Ariadne's offerings. I c dered it medium-rare, but it arriv medium-well. familiarity that excess informality in neighborhood eateries often begets. Crisp-crusted bread from Cambridge's Hi-Rise Bread Company provided the perfect vehicle for mopping up Tsardounis' toothsome sauces. A good selection of wines across a reasonable range of prices included a dry, almost austere barbera d'Asti ($7 a glass). The few half bottles offered included 2001 Lohr Cypress barrel-fermented chardonnay ($15). Full, rich and buttery, in the California style, it was a fine accompaniment for the richly sauced halibut. The chardonnay was served cold. Unaccompanied by an ice bucket, however, it warmed up in the course of the dinner, one of the few service slips I experienced.

Among Ariadne's desserts, the refreshing frozen lemon mousse ($8) was accompanied by fresh black raspberries and poundcake and finished with a lusciously tangy lemon sauce. Summer berry crostata ($11) featured warm, rich pastry topped with tart-sweet summer berries and white nectarines. While somewhat pricey, the crostata's substantial size made it more than adequate for sharing.

A flight of sorbets includes blueberry, coconut, cantaloupe and lemon.

The restaurant offers a good selection of wines at reasonable prices.

Chef Tsardounis and Malloy have sold their highly regarded Cambridge restaurant, Aspasia, to focus all of their attention on Ariadne. Malloy's eye for style and decor, and her supervision of the front of the house, combined with Tsardounis' sure culinary instincts, promise to give this estimable eatery more staying power than restaurants that previously occupied the space. When the chefs go marching in…

Turn and re-Turn...Living Lounge...

Michael Leviton doesn't just play hard to get; he is hard to get. "I usually say no to anything that makes me leave the kitchen," says the seriously hardworking chef/owner of Lumiere. So what was this low-key, non–party animal doing at boutique nitery Saint amid a bevy of top local chefs—Saint's own Rene Michelena, Thomas John of Mantra, Joanne Chang of Flour, Marc Orfaly of Pigalle—and special guest Andrew Chase of Mark's in the Mark Hotel in New York City?

Apparently, enjoying himself immensely both in the kitchen and in the dining room during Saint's most recent "Turn the Tables" night. Every six weeks or so, Michelena assembles a sociable group of chefs to cook one course apiece for appreciative diners who promise to be a very desirable demographic, especially in these slow times. "Rene called," says Leviton, "so I thought, why not on a Monday night in August?" The next TtT takes place in late September.

Wake 'n' Bake: When Tony Ambrose reopens the former Ambrosia on Huntington as a Blackfin Chop House, the centerpiece of the new restaurant will be a stainless steel–lined, mahogany "tuna coffin." According to Ambrose, the coffin is "more beautiful, more aesthetically pleasing" than the boxes that are customarily used to ship large whole tuna to Japan. The custom casket, set about five feet above floor level, will display the big fish—usually weighing from 300 to 500 pounds—before the chef whips out his 30-inch "samurai blade" to break down the tuna in front of the diners.

"I'm more excited about this than I was about opening Ambrosia the first time," says Ambrose, who describes the nautical decor as "neat and tight and clean." Until, of course, the big knife turns him into Sweeney Codd. He expects to open the new Blackfin by mid-October.

More bounce to the lounge: Yes, the hookahs have left the building, but there's still reason to don your lounge-erie and head over to Mantra. New plush-to-the-push red settees and marble mini-tables provide a more comfortable setting in which to enjoy a comfortably priced ($8-$13) "lounge menu" ranging from wild mushroom samosas with tamarind-fig sauce to smoked tenderloin carpaccio, not to mention the fresh-fruit "Man-trinis" in peach, watermelon, mango, and pomegranate flavors. Honestly, these days martinis are being subjected to more experiments than the average lab rats and not always to the betterment of humankind. A key lime martini can be delicious, but a créme brûlée martini sounds like a big mistake. If you actually drink one, do let us know.

SECOND COURSE

Number's up: The 57, which first opened in 1951, moved into its Theater District hotel location (now the Radisson) in 1974, and underwent a Peter Niemitz makeover less than two years ago, has closed. But it's not completely gone. Ever adaptable, that same stylish space, instead of competing in a tough restaurant economy, will now be used to meet the growing demand for banquet room at the Radisson.

Start the revolution: Tim Healy is the new executive chef at the Hyatt Regency Cambridge, which means he'll also be in charge of hotel restaurants Zephyr on the Charles and Spinnaker... Shane Lessard, formerly of Grill 23 and No. 9 Park in Boston, Harvest in Cambridge, and Fore Street in Portland, Maine, is the new wine director at UpStairs on the Square. Lessard will continue the popular Wednesday-night wine tastings and dinners initiated by former wine director Lorenzo Savona. IB

Unoaking the Secret

BY SANDY BLOCK MW

Chardonnay and oak: the royalty of white wine. This glamour couple has been together for so long that they've begun to look alike. Sometimes it seems that where one leaves off the other begins, to the point where the two appear not merely complementary but indistinguishable. In the worlds of wine and fashion, however, all things must pass, so there have been some definite cracks showing up in the decades-long marriage lately.

It started when some bright, ambitious winemakers decided to push things perhaps a bit further than they should have in a bold new direction. As easy as it is to buy a barrel, it's that much harder to get the delicate fruit of the chardonnay grape tasting perfectly ripe and in balance. The path of least resistance dictated to the winemaking guild that if people like the way chardonnay tastes after it's been aged and perhaps fermented in an oak barrel—if that smoky toasty buttery flavor is all the rage—why not just take it to the limit? Why not forget about the grape flavor altogether and make wine so it tastes like wood? This reasoning proved very popular, and anything that works in one vintage is copied by virtually everyone the next. So in a short period of time we started to see extremely oaky chardonnays popping up everywhere, until eventually the press and some troublesome chefs said something to the effect of, "Hold on there, boys. People may buy this big buttery stuff, but you can't drink it with food." Some winemakers then wondered if perhaps they had gotten things backwards and if maybe the oak had become a bit too dominant.

So fast-forward to 2003, and we have the novel concept of "unoaked chardonnay," able to stand on its own, friendly with food and doing quite well after the divorce. This is actually far from a new idea. There were always producers who believed that the grape had a personality of its own that it wanted to express and that its flavors were being unnaturally suppressed. Helped by the recent explosion of interest in sauvignon blancs and rieslings that are not aged in wood, chardonnay producers worldwide have begun to experiment with producing their wines in a pure, fruit-driven style, where you actually taste the grape and nothing but the grape because there's no barrel-aging to mask it. Chardonnay is naturally less dramatic than sauvignon blanc and riesling though, so when it's done right in an unoaked style, the flavors are milder. Subtlety is in today, so the time is right for us to drink more chardonnay in this mode, although the problem is that when the fruit's not done right, the wine can be low-key to the point of tasting nonexistent.

Where are the most exciting places to explore the unadorned, newly liberated flavors of chardonnay? Generally in cool-climate wine regions at the limits of where the grape will be able to fully ripen, meaning Chablis, Burgundy proper, New Zealand, northern Italy and cooler parts of Australia and the United States. The problem in warmer areas is that acidity levels are too low for the grape to have much flavor interest beyond some murky, vaguely melonlike characteristics.

To me, the classic is and remains Chablis, as long as the winemaker keeps to the traditional style and doesn't age the wine in a barrel in imitation of the norm farther south in the Cote de Beaune. Fine Chablis has a lovely minerallike flavor tone that I find complementary to the crisp apple and citrus fruit, which is more chardonnay-specific. The best are denominated Premier Cru and Grand Cru, and they can age beautifully, so if you find a bottle that is five or six years old and you can be sure of the storage being sound, you'll have a much more interesting drink. The only problem is knowing which producers use oak and which don't; there your best guide is the retailer or restaurateur who purchased the wines because the information is almost never included on the label.

New Zealand and Australia are a different story, and this is one of the reasons why these countries are among the hottest purveyors of wine worldwide. Quite simply, if you find a bottle of chardonnay from one of these countries, the bottle will proclaim prominently on the label in large print, "Unoaked." I tend to prefer the New Zealand wines, especially those from Marlborough or Martinborough, because they are gently fruity, well structured and, like the best Chablis, lingering in flavor, even if they lack that magic mineral essence. Other good versions can be found in the Mâcon district of southern Burgundy, Collio and Trentino in northern Italy, Oregon and California's Central Coast, although in all of these areas the problem is the same as in Chablis: The label won't give you much information about the oak treatment or lack thereof. ■

OPENING FRI./AUG.29

Movies: Hot as Popcorn

We admit it: We haven't yet made a proper fuss over one of the hippest, most interesting things to happen to the local cinema scene in years—the opening of the Allston Cinema Underground. Showcasing cutting-edge art-house, independent, cult and zany foreign films, the theater opened in June with a series of off-kilter Asian action and kung-fu movies. In July, the theme moved to music documentaries, and the current series features some of the best new independent film releases. Here's a quick preview for the weeks to come: Opening Aug. 29 is the charming Melvin Goes to Dinner, a hit at this year's Independent Film Festival of Boston. The movie, which is somewhat reminiscent of 1981's My Dinner with Andre, captures the conversation of four people at a restaurant. Opening Sept. 12 is the campy Beyond Re-Animator, the third installment of the ultra-gory Re-Animator saga. Also opening in September is the super-silly Southlander: Diary of a Desperate Musician. What we love the most, however, is the Wednesday night "weekly ass-kicking"—a series of classic Hong Kong and kung fu action films. 214 Harvard Ave., Allston (617-912-8626).

Education: Earth to Mars

How many times have you promised to wake up before dawn to see a meteor shower or watch a comet streaking across the sky? Then, when the time came, you sleepily turned off your alarm clock and snuggled deeper under the covers? Well, this time you have no excuse to miss a celestial spectacle. On Aug. 27 Mars will be the closest it has been to Earth in 50,000 years—a mere 35 million miles away. With the naked eye, you'll be able to see a bright red object blazing in the night sky—bigger and brighter than usual. And you don't have to set the alarm for this one; you'll be able to see Mars as early as 10 pm. If nearby buildings block your view, we suggest you join other stargazers at the Museum of Science, which will offer a special planetarium show and a Star Party on the roof of the museum's garage. Mars viewing begins at 10 pm. Science Park, Boston (617-589-0273). www.mos.org. 6:30-11 pm, weather permitting.

SUN./SEPT. 7

Music: Rabble Rousers Redux

Move over, new-school pop-punks. Cheap Trick wrote the book on playful power-pop decades ago. When members of Green Day and Blink 182 were still in diapers, this quartet was churning out hit after hit. And though it's possible that cover bands have played Cheap Trick's songs more than the seminal group itself—think "Surrender" and "I Want You to Want Me"—Cheap Trick is still going strong, satisfying the singalong desires of original fans and winning over newcomers. The band comes to the Orpheum as part of the Unlimited Sunshine Tour. Also on the bill: Cake, Detroit Cobras, the Hackensaw Boys and Charlie Louvin. 1 Hamilton Place, Boston (617-931-2000). $30-$35.

SUN./SEPT. 7

CityScope: All the World's a Fair

On any given day, walking through culturally diverse Jamaica Plain feels a bit like taking a trip around the world: ethnic bakeries and grocers abound; restaurants dish out delicacies like Jamaican beef patties, Brazilian feijoada and Ethiopian injera; and the sounds of merengue drift through open windows. But once a year, the spirit of diversity hits a high point as the neighborhood pulls out all the stops for the annual Jamaica Plain World's Fair. What began as a simple sidewalk sale 14 years ago has grown into an extravaganza attracting more than 20,000 people. The event features music, dance, arts and crafts, and international food, plus three stages with salsa, merengue, gospel, funk, mariachi, rock and reggae. Hyde/Jackson Square, Centre Street, Jamaica Plain (617-522-3694). 12-6 pm.

Theater

JUST OPENED

Collected Stories
Gloucester Stage Company, 267 East Main St., Gloucester (978-281-4433). www.gloucesterstage.com.

Shakesepeare & Co. presents The Complete Works of William Shakespeare (abridged).

Wed.-Sat., 8 pm; Sun., 5 pm. Aug. 27-Sept 7. $30. Donald Margulies' Pulitzer Prize–nominated play follows the evolving and occasionally volatile relationship between a renowned short-story writer and graduate school professor and her protégée.

Frederick Law Olmsted: Passages in the Life of an Unpractical Man
Frederick Law Olmsted National Historic Site, 99 Warren St., Brookline (617-566-1689, ext. 235). MBTA: Green Line to Coolidge Corner. Aug. 31, 4 pm. This one-man performance by Gerry Wright celebrates Olmsted's life and legacy and commemorates the 100th anniversary of the landscape architect's death.

Old Soldiers
The Theatre Cooperative, 277 Broadway, Somerville (617-625-1300). www.theatrecoop.org. Fri. and Sat., 8 pm. Through Sept. 15. $10. Robert Saxner directs this Martin Jones play in which three veterans share war stories on Armistice Day in 1962.

Out on the Edge: Festival of Lesbian, Gay, Bisexual & Transgender Theater
Boston Center for the Arts Theater, 539 Tremont St., Boston (617-436-2787). www.thetheateroffensive.org. Sept. 6-27 (call for event schedule). $18-$27. The Theater Offensive's LGBT festival hosts a range of events from interactive discussions with performers, playwrights and directors to workshops, panels and community events.

Pacific Overtures
North Shore Music Theatre, 62 Dunham Road, Beverly (617-232-7200). www.nsmt.org. Tue., Thu., Fri., 8 pm; Wed., Sat., 2 and 8 pm; Sun., 2 pm. Through Sept. 14. $16.25-$47.25. This musical about the clash of cultures following Japan's first contact with America combines the music of composer Stephen Sondheim with the ancient Japanese arts of Kabuki theater, haiku, dance and masks.

NOW RUNNING

Bankside Festival
Founders' Theatre, Shakespeare & Company, 70 Kemble St., Lenox (413-637-3353). www.shakespeare.org. Through Aug. 31. Free. This outdoor festival offers a variety of entertainment, including romps through Shakespeare's most famous scenes, musical interludes, slapstick comedies and swordfights. •A Midsummer Night's Dream: Thu., 6 pm; Sat., 10 am and 6 pm. The youth of Athens and a troupe of laborers enter the fairy kingdom and are transformed by magic and mischief into their truest selves. •Shakespeare and the Language That Shaped a World: Wed., 6 pm; Sun., 10 am and 6 pm. This fast-paced performance provides historical and thematic contexts for selected Shakespearean scenes, which are presented with more modern language.

Blue Man Group

Deliver Us from Evil

The Magdalene Sisters is a potent Sinderella story

BY PAUL SHERMAN

The Magdalene Sisters depicts life in one of Ireland's Magdalene asylums for "wayward" girls in the 1960s.

Practically all of 2003's good movie drama has been in documentaries. So it's only fitting that one of the year's rare pieces of fiction to match Capturing the Friedmans, Spellbound or The Weather Underground is itself based on reality. The Magdalene Sisters, actor-turned-director Peter Mullan's intense and brooding knockout, is set in one of Ireland's Magdalene asylums, where—until the 1990s—the Catholic Church took in "wayward" young women, worked them like pack mules and reaped the financial rewards of their work.

The movie's three teenage characters become instantly sympathetic once the viewer sees what passes for unredeemably wayward in Dublin County in 1964. Rose (Dorothy Duffy) gives birth to an illegitimate child, and her parents browbeat her into giving the baby up for adoption. Margaret (Anne-Marie Duff) is raped at a wedding by a cousin, and the men in her family blame her. Bernadette (Nora-Jane Noone), who lives in a church-run orphanage, merely flirts with the local boys.

In its early action, The Magdalene Sisters makes clear that the injustices it highlights are part of the wider culture, and not just the church. Rose, Margaret and Bernadette are considered shameful only because they're women, and the men in their families, the church and the government have just the place to lock them away, one of the asylums named for the Bible's poster child for female sinfulness.

The women's nightmare only gets worse after each arrives at the asylum on the same day. The asylum is really just a big industrial laundry in which the women work seemingly endless hours. Its head nun (Geraldine McEwan) has developed oblivious self-righteousness into an art form, which usually involves demeaning the girls she's meant to be looking after. In the most emotionally brutal scene, one nun viciously belittles the naked bodies of a group of young women.

Mullan, a Scotsman whose acting credits include My Name Is Joe, The Claim and the locally shot Session 9, manages to make this cruelty dramatic, rather than just sadistic. He also wrote the script, and his writing and directing have a bracing immediacy. The movie's lean style is apparent early on, in the wedding scene when Margaret is raped; the aftermath of the rape—and the scheming of the men around Margaret—unfurls through sharp editing, with little dialogue. Mullan also infuses The Magdalene Sisters with a remarkable amount of dark humor, most of it stemming from cheeky Bernadette. In one amusing shot, a priest is blessing an unseen person or thing that turns out to be a bank of new washing machines.

Overall, the movie has a wider range of emotions than the subject matter might suggest. And the title characters are not just passive punching bags. They fight the harsh treatment they receive from the nuns and priests, especially after they realize the nuns have no plans to ever set them free. Rose, Bernadette and Margaret also become involved in aiding Crispina (Eileen Walsh), a less stable woman who was in the asylum before they got there and who is the most tragic figure in the movie. Margaret in particular finds imaginative ways to help her and get back at a priest who's been taking advantage of Crispina.

The Magdalene Sisters works its way to its heroines' climactic act of rebellion as a good women-in-prison film might, but it's not exploitative or morally simple. Its heroines aren't perfect, and its villainy is spread over many people, in differing degrees. Mullan's moral outrage hits its targets with precision and power, and The Magdalene Sisters is a primal scream against injustice. IB

The Magdalene Sisters ★★★½

Written and directed by Peter Mullan. With Nora-Jane Noone, Anne-Marie Duff, Dorothy Duffy, Eileen Walsh and Geraldine McEwan. Rated R. Miramax Films.

New Releases

American Splendor ★★★
The movie version of Harvey Pekar's autobiograph ical comic book series sticks to the comics' realis so much that, in addition to scenes with a pitch perfect Paul Giamatti as cranky Pekar, it also in cludes narration by and interviews with Pekar hir self. That hybrid is clumsy at times, but the mov captures Pekar's search for the extraordinary in th everyday, as well as his hard-headed individualism with precision and affection. We see Pekar at h humble file clerk job and in his legendary Dav Letterman appearances. (At Kendall Square an Coolidge Corner.)

American Wedding ★★
The last installment of the American Pie trilogy is T Stifler Show. Seann William Scott's Stifler is the life this generally mirthless party. His vulgarities pa tially camouflage the fact that this series long ago r out of ideas and that seeing Jason Biggs in emba rassing predicaments for the 54th time can be a maj drag. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Bend It Like Beckham ★★½
Though it can seem like the formulaic story of woman caught between two cultures (the formu that gave us My Big Fat Greek Wedding), Parminc Nagra gives a winning performance as Jess, the I dian-English girl with soccer skills and two Si parents who won't let her pursue such a nontrad tional endeavor. When Jess is recruited to play fo local women's team, with the possibility of disco ery by an American pro team, the scene is set lots of running around behind the parents' back a comic mishaps, ad nauseum. It's all pretty p dictable, but Nagra, Anupam Kher (as Jess' fath and Pirates of the Caribbean's Keira Knightley (as l teammate and sometime rival) help dignity fig caricature to a standoff. (At Copley Place, Kenc Square and suburbs.)

Camp ★★
Actor turned writer and now director Todd Gra unconvincingly feel-good indie movie feature gung ho teen cast playing the aspiring singe dancers and actors at Camp Ovation, a perform arts camp. There's some novelty in seeing talen teens play adults in fully staged production numb of Sondheim or Bacharach-David songs (this is Terror of Tiny Town of musicals). But the come drama is such a superficial after-school special, w all its dilemmas miraculously resolved without fus muss, that it has no emotional credibility. Despite the unrequited love, sexual dilemmas and backst bickering, it's a trifle. (At Kendall Square.)

Freddy vs. Jason ★★
OK, first of all, that big stiff Jason Voorhees doe deserve to be witty Freddy Krueger's manserva let alone be presented as his equal in a match And the Nightmare on Elm Street series is vastly perior to the Friday the 13th series (I'm still wait for one good movie from that series). Both se closed weakly, and this Celebrity Boxing–s showdown can't revive them. Jason is his dc self, Freddy is disappointingly bland, the teen cl acters caught in the middle of their battle are gettable, and there's way too much unconvinc plot for the movie just to have some fun. As us little that happens in the film really matters, cause it ends in a slate-wiping sequel setup. Boston Common and suburbs.)

Melvin Goes to Dinner ★★★
Bob Odenkirk (TV's Mr. Show) makes a strong rectorial debut with this low-budget comedy b on a play by co-star (and former Daily Show cont utor) Michael Blieden. The title basically descr the movie, as sad-sack Melvin (Blieden) goes ou eat with an old friend (Matt Price), a friend o (Stephanie Courtney) and a friend of (Annabelle Gurwitch). The realistic interplay tween the cast is what makes this work, Odenkirk filmed it with several digital video c eras. The characters' self-revealing stories are very amusing, while there are cameos f Odenkirk, David Cross, Jack Black and Maura ney. (At Allston Cinema Underground.)

Passionada ★★
Shot in New Bedford's Portuguese-American ne borhoods, this Moonstruck wanna-be is too clum achieve its intended romantic sweep. Romantic l Sofia Milos and Jason Isaacs are a little stiff, the ing is amateurish at times, and the whole t comes off like a mediocre cable movie. (At Fen Copley Square, Harvard Square and suburbs.)

Seabiscuit ★★
Writer-director Gary (Pleasantville) Ross struggl bring Laura Hillenbrand's unforgettable book a the 1930s racehorse to the screen. He veers

Ken Burns–like documentary sequences to fictional comic relief from a radio personality played by William H. Macy. He also repeatedly whacks us over the head with the same point: Owner Charles Howard (Jeff Bridges), trainer Tom Smith (Chris Cooper) and jockey Red Pollard (Tobey Maguire) all excelled at second chances in life, just like the late-blooming horse. The movie might have had more oomph were it earthier, but it's just a well-crafted, generic piece of uplifting sports moviemaking. Read the book. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Secret Lives of Dentists ★★

The perils of modern masculinity are sometimes amusing and provocative in this comedy about a dentist (Campbell Scott) who suspects his dentist wife (Hope Davis) is having an affair. But take away the laughs injected by Denis Leary, playing a cranky patient who becomes an imaginary confidant of the husband, and there's not a whole lot left. Alan Rudolph's movie is sluggish until Leary's sourpuss musician becomes a fantasy figure for the conflicted husband, commenting on the dentist's demanding kids and egging him on to confront his wife. (At Coolidge Corner, Copley Place and Kendall Square.)

Spy Kids 3D: Game Over ★★

"Don't split up," pint-sized spy Juni Cortez (Daryl Sabara) yells at one point in the third Spy Kids movie. "It never works!" He's right. This installment is almost all Juni, with little of his chemistry with sister Carmen (Alexa Vega) and just a taste of their sophisticated parents (Antonio Banderas, Carla Gugino). In separating the Cortezes, much of the fun is lost from this second sequel, in which Juni enters a 3D video game to rescue Carmen and stop the Toymaker (Sylvester Stallone) from taking over kids' minds. The gimmicks of 3D and Stallone have their amusing moments, but this is the first film in the series to appeal mainly to children. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

Thirteen ★★★

In the spectrum of movies about troubled teenage girls, Catherine Hardwicke's debut falls somewhere between the cliches of the recent Blue Car and the unique emotional eeriness of The Virgin Suicides. Evan Rachel Wood, who has a Kirsten Dunst–like mix of sweetness and naughtiness, is convincing as the initially girlish seventh-grader who yearns to hang out with the popular, more physically mature girls—and gets to, by taking drugs, shoplifting and pushing her budding sexuality just as they do. Meanwhile, her frazzled mom (Holly Hunter) tries to straddle the line between being firm and friendly, while her new best friend (Nikki Reed, who co-wrote the script with Hardwicke) manipulates everyone in sight. Although the movie can sometimes come off as a pat cautionary tale, its emotional messiness is awfully realistic, with most everyone oblivious to their own faults. (At Kendall Square, Coolidge Corner and Copley Place.)

28 Days Later ★★★

Trainspotting director Danny Boyle's apocalyptic sci-fi/action film owes a lot to those of George Romero, especially Dawn of the Dead. Still, it's a creepy and lively blend of character drama, zombie film, social commentary, vampire film and action, set in motion when a group of animal-rights activists frees rage-infected lab primates. The animals violently attack and infect the activists, who attack other humans and so on, until nearly all of England (and perhaps the world) is acting like bloodthirsty soccer hooligans. The movie follows Jim (Cillian Murphy), who awakens from a coma into this new world. He meets up with the few uninfected people left, and they try to find any remaining vestige of society and stay alive. (At Boston Common, Fenway and suburbs.)

The Weather Underground, a documentary about the late-'60s/early-'70s militant group, shows at the Brattle.

The Weather Underground ★★★½

Since the range of political discussion is so narrow these days, and those who merely vote are actually considered "involved," it's easy to forget how much wider the political spectrum was back in the late 1960s and early '70s. Sam Green and Bill Siegel's documentary is a fascinating reminder. It profiles the Weather Underground (also known as the Weathermen), the militant splinter group from the Students for a Democratic Society whose most infamous achievement was its "Bring the War Home" campaign, a series of bombings meant to remind Americans of the acts the Nixon administration was perpetrating in Vietnam. Although the 90-minute movie sometimes just scratches the surface, it's full of bracing old clips of Weathermen leaders like Bernadine Dohrn and Mark Rudd, as well as bittersweet, candid interviews with the now middle-aged radicals. (At the Brattle Theatre, Aug. 22-Sept. 4.)

The anti-Hanson

Brother outfit Kings of Leon flirts with the dark side on the road from church revivals to rock and roll salvation

BY PAUL ROBICHEAU

Southern boy Jared Followill learned to play bass in a month when he got the chance to join a band last year at age 16.

But he wasn't auditioning for a boy band. Followill was drafted by his older brothers, singer-guitarist Caleb and drummer Nathan, and guitarist cousin Matthew for Kings of Leon, a scruffy Tennessee rock and roll outfit already being hailed in England as the greatest thing since the Strokes.

"I don't have to dance or put hair gel in, or bathe or cut my hair for that matter," says Followill, who roughed it for years as the son of an itinerant Pentecostal preacher who brought the three brothers on his rural church rounds.

The Followill clan, a.k.a. the Kings of Leon, from left: brothers Jared (bass), Caleb (vocals/guitar) and Nathan (drums) and cousin Matthew (guitar).

"Sometimes at the church we'd preach in, they'd put us up in a motel or we'd stay at a house," he says from Colorado, the band's second stop on the Lollapalooza tour. Following that jaunt, the band headlines a tour that hits Axis Sept. 12. "But most of the time, depending on the week, we'd sleep in the car or get a motel on our own."

Or, in the case of one revival, the boys would get picked up after school in Arkansas, ride three hours each way to the church in Oklahoma, and make it back to bed by 1 am, only to get up the next day for class and do it all over again—for 11 consecutive weeks.

"After that, we got into home schooling," Followill says. "That's why we don't have asses. We've all got flat asses from riding our whole lives."

While Jared admits that as a child he would fall asleep under the pews in church, Nathan and Caleb eventually began to play the drums behind their pianist mother at the services.

"If you're looking from the outside, it can seem a little cultish," the youngest Followill says of the Pentecostal religion. "But the church services were so powerful. There was a lot of energy. It was like rock and roll. They'd use electric guitars. And the people who sang had so much character in their voices and stories to tell.

"If your dad's a preacher, you end up being a preacher," he says. "But my dad was different from most preachers. He was a closet alcoholic. We ended up getting out of the church, and turned on to so many different things, we never went back."

Among those discoveries were the Rolling Stones, Neil Young and the Who, music their father used to play when their mother wasn't around. Then came the Cure, the Pixies and other newer bands. Yet the brothers still drew from their early experiences.

"We didn't really like our lives that much, so we always had a better imagination about things than most kids," Followill says. "We were all kinda dreamers, and we draw on that now. And we were good liars. But I think it builds character."

Such imagination fuels the pathos behind the dark characters (adulterers, hookers and murderers among them) that populate Kings of Leon's new album, Youth and Young Manhood, which Britain's New Musical Express dubbed "one of the most exciting rock 'n' roll debuts of the last 10 years."

Certainly, the music shows a range far beyond the years of the Followill boys (Nathan, the oldest, is 24), echoing and transcending their rock, gospel and country influences. Standouts "Red Morning Light," "Molly's Chambers" and "Wasted Time" seethe with catchy riffs and feverish vocals that suggest a hormonally amped Tom Petty. How did it gel so well, so quickly?

"It has a lot to do with family chemistry," says the nascent bassist, noting that the extended Followill clan has always been good at team activities, be it basketball, softball or music. "When we play together, it's something electric. We can all feel it. We get chill bumps."

Before he got his first bass last year though, Followill had only fooled around on his brother's guitar. "It taught me what chords go with what," he says. "I would just listen to records and mimic my favorite bassists.

"We weren't seasoned musicians and weren't really great at our instruments," he says. "Before the White Stripes and the Strokes, it made us nervous. But we saw these other bands and said, 'That's pretty raw and people are accepting it.'"

Now, Followill says, "I go up and play, and I'll have all these bass players that I look up to come up and say, 'Man, I love your bass lines. You've got great melody and stuff,' and I don't know what to say. I don't feel deserving."

"It's crazy," he adds of the buzz that's suddenly exploding around the band, which the brothers named after their cool grandfather Leon. "We were so poor when we grew up, we thought it would be funny to call ourselves kings." IB

Tilting the Axis

Square One at Axis gains steam, presenting big-name DJs without any gimmicks

A few years have passed since the dark, intimate dance floor at Axis regularly hosted international superstar DJs on Thursday nights. Thanks to a new weekly event known as Square One, the Thursday-night buzz is now back on Lansdowne Street. The idea behind Square One is simple: a stripped-down, back-to-basics club night with no glitzy promotion and a singular focus on music.

Over the past few months, Square One partygoers have been treated to performances by an ensemble of talented local DJs (plus a few special guests with local ties, including Steve Porter, Chris Fortier and Dave Ralph). "Since Square One kicked off this past spring, I think that people have had a good taste of our local DJ talent," says Square One regular Dave Weigner, who goes by the DJ moniker Dave Wagz. "Now I'm excited that we're ready to add some new sounds and guests to the mix." One such guest slated for a special set Aug. 28 is Hybrid, a U.K. dance-music superstar act. Hybrid's Mike Truman, Chris Healings and Lee Mullins have spent almost a decade invigorating dance music with their original studio productions and remix work. By combining huge acts like Hybrid with a no-frills, underground atmosphere, Square One is reviving the spirit of 2000 at Axis.

Thursdays at Axis, 13 Lansdowne St., Boston (617-262-2424). 10 pm-2 am. 19+. $5-$10.

• PERMANENT MAKEUP BY MONICA CALVO

"Due to season allergies and hypersensitive skin, permanent makeup seemed the perfect solution. I never wore a lot of eyeliner or lipstick, so I wanted my results to be conservative. The result was just how I imagined, very natural.
The effect on my life is dramatic, though. I wake up looking less tired, and I spend far less time getting ready in the morning. My experience was pain free and the work was perfect.
Thank You, Monica!"

Life in the FastLane

I am a current FastLane member. I am a firm believer that this service is convenient, efficient and time-saving. However, there are certain aspects of FastLane that are dangerous. Each morning I zip along until I approach the first of my FastLane toll booths. This is where the nightmare begins. There are two yellow FastLane booths on the far right and only one near the left side. Inevitably some imbecile is stopped in the toll booth. This is extremely dangerous for other drivers who are expecting to drive through at 15 mph! Why would they stop in the booth?! Good question. I thought that to receive a license one needed the ability to read, but I guess I was mistaken, for people are always confused by the FastLane despite the ample signage and warnings.

Recently, some complete moron was stopped in the booth and expected the four cars (including me) behind him to reverse direction so that he could pull out of the lane and try another! This is very common. Yeah, that's smart! Throw your car in reverse on a highway! A few weeks ago I observed a woman who had stopped in the FastLane. She was throwing change at the side of the booth. Now, mind you, there was no basket to collect the change. Quarters and nickels banged against the metal booth. She waited for some invisible gate to open and proceeded to drive through.

If you are stopped in that booth you deserve to be hit by a car, or better yet, an 18-wheeler that can't stop so quickly. Smarten up. You are an embarrassment to yourself and should be ashamed. However, if by chance you do get confused, or you can't merge properly, just blow through the toll. That is a whole lot better than potentially causing a five-car pileup!

To all of those drivers that continue to act like idiots and cause back-ups in the Fast Lane, expect me to lay on my horn, scream at you from my car, record your plate and report you to the MTA—after I've given you the finger. See you on the road,
—Too Fast, Too Furious

Bus Beauty

We were on the No. 9 bus headed to Southie, and you sat down next to a crazy but happy old guy who was talking about being from another planet and something about Yeats. I was sitting across from you and was taken by your dazzling smile and good humor. It was an awkward moment to introduce myself but now I'm kicking myself that I didn't. If you happen to read this drop me a line!
—crazyno92003@yahoo.com

Mr. Nasty

You are a vile human being. You pretended to be my friend, yet you kept stabbing me in the back. You go on about your wife, yet you cheat on her constantly and kept a mistress. I feel sorry for you. Obviously you have low self-esteem and you have never had much luck with the ladies or you wouldn't behave this way. What do you need to prove? You aren't proving it by walking around making a fool of yourself, saying that every woman wants your body—like every woman wants a fat, balding, homely middle-aged man with back hair and a three-inch package. Keep carrying around that gun to make up for your lack of masculinity. Grow some balls, loser.

Parking Pandemonium

On Aug. 16 at around noon I was on Boylston Street and proceeded to park in an empty space. Unbeknownst to me, there was a raging lunatic that had spied the spot, and was navigating across three lanes of traffic in an attempt to park where I had just placed my vehicle. Then he proceeded to come within inches of my car, yell something that I can only assume was not of good will and speed off. Now if this young man in his fresh-out-of-the-junkyard, red-primer-colored pickup truck had stayed there, I would have no doubt relinquished the spot to him. But he left and I put my quarters in the meter and went about my business. Upon my return, I gave my car a once-over, and sure enough, there was some type of sticky caramel coffee all over the front of my Benz. Hey Primer Truck Guy—instead of being the Coffee Bandit, how about being the Get A Job Bandit, and making better use out of all your apparent free time.

Asian Girl

Seeking sexy, size-zero, Asian girl with long, wet, black hair, who was riding the back of her shopping cart in Shaw's Supermarket at Prudential Center at 10 pm on July 30. We checked out together. Please shop at Shaw's late some Wednesday evening so we can meet again. You are the coolest chick I have ever seen.

Aug. 11

It was my birthday and I was hanging with my friends at the Blue Cat Cafe when you walked in the door. My eyes were popping and it wasn't because of the martinis. You entered and met some of your friends, a scorching redhead in a black and white dress, a loud-laughing blonde and a busty brunette. But you, oh my pretty flower, you are absolutely smoking hotness. You were wearing a black shirt and jeans that really showed your assets. I wanted to talk to you but you looked like you were having too much fun and I was too intimidated. I will be there on Sept. at 8 pm, waiting for you.
—Mr. Dry Martini.

Crunchy Granola

I saw you in the hallway at work. You went into the kitchen the same time I did. You reached for the dolphin-safe tuna, and I for the chemical-free and environmentally safe nicoise salad. Since we share an office and are obviously earth-friendly, maybe we could share something special together. Want to go have a vegan burger sometime?

Tuff Choice

I smiled and you smiled too. You looked at me, and I looked back. You came from San Francisco that night late June. You went out with my friends and me. We had fun! We talked and laughed. You bought me a sweet drink, my favorite. I am hooked now. I keep rewinding back to that night and remembering every moment we spent together, like a romantic comedy. It is ridiculous but true. I wish you were close. I wonder, what would you sacrifice, if you only knew

To Andy

There once was a man named Andy
Who, when sober, could almost be handy.
He loved corn beef hash
And bands that were brash
And was always free with his candy
Happy half birthday.

Moopy

I just wanted to let you know that I love you and am so happy to be your wife. We're two lucky kids, surrounded by loving family and friends. And we have each other, always. Thank you for loving me, being my best friend, always keeping me laughing, and for letting me be me. Happy first anniversary! Love

rockie horoscope

AUGUST 27 – SEPTEMBER 9, 2003 BY ROCKIE GARDINER

VIRGO AUGUST 23-SEPTEMBER 22

Everything's coming up Virgo! Really, the best year in the past 12 begins when magnanimous Jupiter joins magnetic Venus, the moon and the sun in your sign on the 27th. So many interesting opportunities, such ease of access to influential people, such smart moves can turn even a shy and retiring Virgin into a major player. But first you may have to handle unexpected weirdness from your partner or a rebellion rising from the ranks of fellow workers. Why this is so sexy is a puzzle only you can solve. Intriguing.

LIBRA

SEPTEMBER 23-OCTOBER 22

Interesting changes can take place if you let your artistic Venus ruler accept the surprises in store this week. As long as you maintain that enviable Libran sense of balance, an unexpected event, even a minor accident can be enlightening. But don't fall into a trap that your lover or child may set by playing on your sympathy for the underdog. They'll be more demanding and devoted to their cause while Uranus and Mars in Pisces, the sign of the martyr, are opposing Venus. Still, something inexplicably erotic can emerge from the juxtaposition.

SCORPIO

OCTOBER 23-NOVEMBER 21

The pressure to succeed, to give a stellar performance eases once the sun, Venus and Jupiter leave spotlight-loving Leo. While this upbeat trio is in Virgo, you can accomplish as much without attracting a lot of attention. For a somewhat secretive Scorpio, this is a good thing. Especially if a family matter undergoes the dramatic change one expects when three planets oppose not only your Mars co-ruler, but topsy-turvy Uranus as well. However, what first appears chaotic could turn out to be a stroke of luck.

SAGITTARIUS

NOVEMBER 22-DECEMBER 21

The Virgo new moon on the 27th is critical because you're being urged to come up with something radically different this season. Career challenges can start as soon as your Jupiter ruler faces inventive Uranus on the 29th. The energy to get a bold enterprise under way peaks when Jupiter opposes motivated Mars shortly after Labor Day. This is your window of opportunity, so plan accordingly. Of course, you might become distracted by a sudden attraction to another inappropriate person, but what else is new?

CAPRICORN

DECEMBER 22-JANUARY 20

Have faith. Even if odd things are happening all around you, if adjustments suddenly have to be made, you'll come out OK. A significant shift of cosmic energy this week favors all earth signs, but Caps—who better?—will see the benefit at first in their financial sector. Later in the year you may get to travel and share the wisdom you've acquired. The Virgo new moon can be the jumping-off point for a project dear to the heart and kind to the wallet of you and a significant other. Do the research before you launch.

AQUARIUS

JANUARY 21-FEBRUARY 18

Another stage in the development of a significant relationship begins with the Virgo new moon on the 27th. Whether it concerns your spouse, business partner, agent, attorney or enemy doesn't matter much. As long as you're aware that a surprise might be stashed up one of their respective sleeves, you should be able to adjust accordingly. Nobody said that quick changes come easily for a fixed sign such as yours, but before too much longer, you'll dart and weave with the best of them, them being the mutable signs: Pisces, Gemini, Virgo and Sag.

PISCES

FEBRUARY 19-MARCH 19

You're about to be rescued, which, for any Pisces adrift in a sea of confusion, would be the answer to all your troubles. Think back 12 years ago: What benefits were bestowed when protective Jupiter was last in Virgo, your cosmic complement? Who was your knight in shining armor, who offered the job opportunity of a lifetime? Something similar, possibly even more promising, can happen over the next 11 months. However, the next few weeks might not go smoothly, and the transition from miserable to happy could be rough.

ARIES

MARCH 20-APRIL 19

Enough summer fun and fooling around! With the practical Virgo new moon on the 27th comes a renewed sense of purpose, particularly since your Mars ruler will soon be tested by the strong-willed sun and "love me or leave me" Venus. You cannot avoid paying a lot more attention to a romantic relationship nor can you leave a creative project in the hands of someone else. And because Mercury will be retrograde for the next three weeks, it's important to keep on top of the comings and goings of paperwork, packages and people.

TAURUS

APRIL 20-MAY 20

The season, the semester could get off to a rocky start simply because you're more willing to be swept off your feet by a sudden turn of events, less concerned about maintaining the status quo. Perhaps you sense that you'll be protected by benevolent Jupiter once it enters Virgo, another discriminating earth sign, on the 27th. Maybe you're confident that your Venus ruler, also in Virgo, will attract the attention of popular, pretty people. Or is it obvious that whatever the new moon sets in motion will benefit the entire family?

GEMINI

MAY 21-JUNE 20

A budding romance can bloom at the strangest times. Keep that in mind as you wait to see what develops from the Virgo new moon on the 27th. You may already have a pretty good idea of what'll happen when your Mercury ruler turns retrograde the next day. Focusing your attention on the house or a family situation can be draining, however a chance to exchange opinions and information about the matter with someone who is not as emotionally involved could be the start of a beautiful friendship. Take the risk.

CANCER

JUNE 21-JULY 22

Moon Children are especially affected by strong planetary influences at work during the all-important new-moon period. These cosmic forces set the tone for the Virgo lunar cycle that begins on the 27th. So if you're aware that erratic Uranus is playing with the on-off switch in your house of assets and values, you won't get too upset when checks don't arrive or payments aren't made on time. Also know that a romantic relationship may run into trouble while loving Venus faces off against argumentative Mars, but it can also heat up enough to blow you away again.

LEO

JULY 23-AUGUST 22

The party's (almost) over. You'll continue to benefit financially after generous Jupiter moves into your Virgo money house, but the philosophical growth spurt you've enjoyed, the wisdom you've acquired, the opportunities and good times you've had just by being in the right place at the right time with the right people won't last much longer. However, you can maintain the elevated position you're in. Just roll with whatever punches are thrown at you when your sun ruler opposes rebellious Uranus and provocative Mars as the month ends.

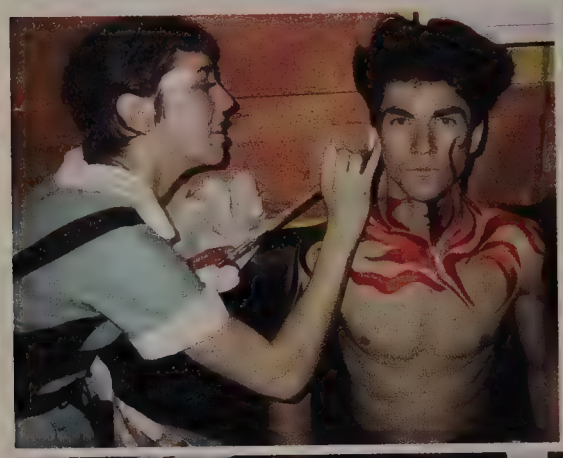
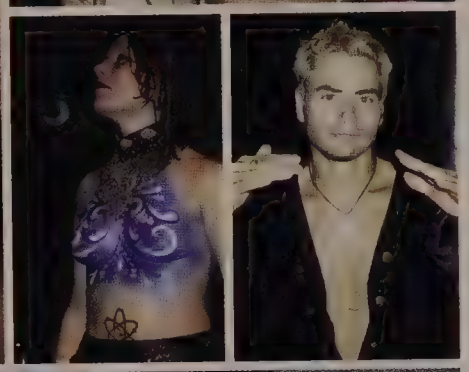
LAST SCENE HERE

BY JONATHAN SOROFF





At the Boston Body Painting Festival, clockwise from top right: Kara Trott and Garabed Setrakian; Tatiana de Profundis; Ben Blanchard; Jason Cohen and Jennifer Wilson; Felicia McNeill, Steve Monson and Brian James; Zea Barker and Brian Viglione.

IS THERE A DERMATOLOGIST IN THE HOUSE?

When it comes to party concepts, getting nearly naked and covering yourself in body paint is among the most imaginative we've heard. Add to that a lineup of tribal-goth-rock acts, a few belly dancers, and lots of multiply pierced people sporting various permutations of the velvet-fishnets-and-tons-of-mascara look, and you've got a real corker of an evening.

The first (and hopefully annual) Boston Body Painting Festival, which took place at the Paradise Rock Club and also served as a CD-release party for the local band Incus, was like a cross between Halloween and a Grateful Dead show. There were appearances by the Baltimore band Ego Likeness, as well as assorted characters from the local cutting-edge music and performance art scenes, while upstairs in the balcony, makeup artists charged a nominal fee to decorate the flesh of anyone who was willing.

In addition to Incus frontman Jason Cohen (painted like the Jolly Green Satyr), other notables on hand included Miss Gothic Massachusetts Tatiana de Profundis (who served as the evening's hostess), vocalists Kara Trott (Fluttr) and Jennifer Wilson; musician-heartthrob Ben Blanchard with willowy blonde yoga instructor Saskia Bergmans; mixological savant Peter Cipriani; fashion designer–animator–artist Zea Barker; supercute Dresden Dolls drummer Brian Viglione; the achingly lovely Felicia McNeill; dancer/construction worker Brian James; the adorable Steve Monson (who works for a mail-order witchcraft supply company); flamboyant video producer Garabed Setrakian; plus, a man who sat in a corner, quietly and intently writing in his journal, someone who announced to no one in particular that he'd just gotten back from an outdoor music festival in Utah, a guy wearing a T-shirt that said Feral Dirt Child, and another guy sporting khakis and a polo shirt who looked like he'd wandered into the wrong party but seemed to enjoy himself nonetheless.

The most curious part of an evening that kept getting curiouser and curiouser was the guy with long purple- and red-dyed dreadlocks and unkempt goatee who, nevertheless, had painstakingly shaved his armpits.

Typical of the evening's conversation were the following comments:

"There's a fine line between looking Goth and looking like a Vegas showgirl," and "I have this theory: Between all the '80s hair bands and the bands that are big now, they ran out of conditioner."

However, the evening's most amusing exchange, overheard by the bar, was the following:

"Is that a tattoo or body paint?"

"Actually, I think it's a skin condition."

WE LOVE, WE LOVE, WE LOVE OUR CALENDAR GIRLS...

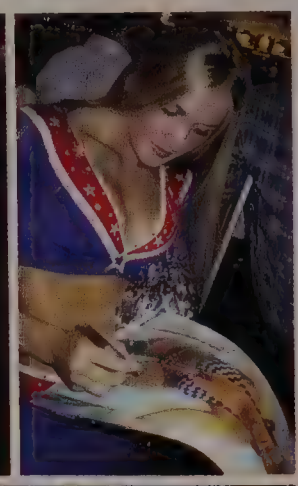
Even if the Patriots don't make the playoffs this year, they've got a winning team as far as their cheerleaders are concerned, a fact made abundantly clear by the party held at Gillette Stadium to celebrate the publication of the Patriots Cheerleaders' 2004 Swimsuit Calendar.

Gathered in the Pro Shop for this unabashed tribute to T&A were such fans and supporters as team scion Jonathan Kraft; Fox Sports Net VP David Woodman; Patriots publishing genius Fred Kirsch and his lovely wife, Nikki; the fearsome foursome of Ted Carlson, Jim Keaney, Eric Spector and Trevor Gillespie (who together make up the white-hot local rock act Roxie); the Pats' pep squad and their perky commander in chief, Tracy Sormanti; lots of friends and relatives; and several admiring guys whose jaws threatened to scrape the floor throughout this jiggle-and-giggle fest.

After the debut of a behind-the-scenes TV show about shooting the calendar, Roxie performed. The cheerleaders, meanwhile, wore uniforms that encouraged speculation as to who might have had breast implants (midriff-baring, spangled red, white and blue halter tops and micro-minis), while patiently signing calendars, caps and anything else admirers put in front of them (imagine Santa's elves with important hair and 34-26-34 measurements).

"Not that I watch porn, but you know who she looks like?" asked one lunkhead, who undoubtedly would have been disappointed to learn that many of the girls are either spoken for or married, and that few (if any) of them are in it to meet guys.

In fact, when asked about their contractual prohibition from dating members of the Patriots, one member of the squad shrugged and said, "Who cares? I'd much rather be a cheerleader." IB



At the Patriots cheerleaders' party, clockwise from top: Sarah Mackin next to her bikini shot; Jonathan Kraft, Tracy Sormanti and Diana Martufi; Joelle Christian and Cassie McLaughlin; Narra Martineau, Elizabeth Hanson and Melinda McGrath; Nikki and Fred Kirsch; Narra Martineau signing calendars.

ARTS APPRECIATION

In a city with as many impressive cultural offerings as Boston (we have more cultural organizations per capita than any other U.S. city), it's easy to become blasé about the beauty and creative expression that surround us. But if you step back for a moment and pretend you're a tourist, you might feel renewed appreciation for the visual art, music, theater and dance that are so abundant here.

With budget cuts the order of the day and arts organizations hit especially hard, getting out to a play, concert or other cultural event is not just personally enriching, it helps ensure that Boston's diverse arts community stays healthy. In this issue, we preview some of the many performances, exhibitions, changes and trends that can make patronizing the arts exciting this fall—free classical music concerts at Boston's many outstanding conservatories, a host of new dancers at Boston Ballet, art exhibitions ranging from Rembrandt to cartoon art, and local theaters' forays into brand new works, to name just a few.

Now's the perfect time to look over what's coming up and mark your calendar for some cultural enrichment this fall—you can keep up with arts happenings, of course, through the many listings in our calendar pages every issue.

As Esther Kaplan, commissioner for Boston's Office of Cultural Affairs, points out, getting involved in the arts can help you see the world around you in a new way. "Art is about creating variation, about taking a different perspective and using all your senses—it can help us remember to do those things in the rest of our lives too," says Kaplan. "And let's not forget that it's fun and brings joy and beauty into our lives."

THE ANTHONY MICHAEL HALL OF FAME

A good friend of mine in the United States mailed me a copy of the Aug. 13 issue, and I just wanted to thank you for publishing that set of photos of Anthony Michael Hall ("Anthony Michael Hall is in the Zone"). What a very good-looking man he has grown into.

I was very pleased to hear The Dead Zone has been renewed for a third season and that AMH will still be in the starring role. In the meantime, I think it's great to see him trying his hand at other things—namely, being a fashion model! Thanks again—the pictures were a real thrill.

—LAURA COUSINS
Dorset, United Kingdom

FURVENT AND FURIOUS

I am very disappointed in your publication. For a number of years, with the rising public awareness of the plight of fur-bearing mammals, shops and magazines were showing very little or no real fur, only fake alternatives. Lately I've noticed a disturbing trend back to the old ways (as with "Fall Fundamentals" in your Aug. 27 issue). What is going on? Have we really lost this much ground? I hope enough people will be as outraged as I am, and this disgusting backsliding in values will once again turn around.

—KRIS COLLINS

VALIDATED PARKING

Every time I read one of Ezra's articles I laugh out loud, and that's rare. The article about his parking dispute ("Parking Spaz," Aug. 13) really hit home for me. When I go into Boston it seems I always have some type of parking situation, but I finally had "The Official Parking Altercation" today. I'd like to thank Ezra for the entertainment he provides us. So few writers have the insight to look at certain situations and realize just how crazy and stupid they really are, but Ezra does, and he mocks them with intelligence and flair.

GREEK DELIGHT

Look up Greek in the cuisine index of the Boston Zagat restaurant guide, and you'll find only a few entries. The majority of Greek-owned establishments in this town tend to be casual family restaurants or takeout joints that serve up the occasional gyro or Greek salad amid burgers and slices of pizza.

Enter Meze Estiatorio, a new Greek restaurant in Charlestown. "You won't see colorful posters of the Greek isles or Aegean blue walls," says co-owner Bill Galatis. "Not that there's anything wrong with that—it's just not what we're presenting here." Instead, you'll find an upscale restaurant that features giant picture windows overlooking the Zakim Bridge and serves gourmet Greek dishes prepared by co-owner and chef Paul Delios of Paolo's Trattoria.

The mouthwatering menu features hot and cold small plates, called "meze," with such delicacies as grilled octopus salad, lamb meatballs simmered in a tomato sauce, mussels steamed in lobster stock and Greek sausage over a bed of arugula. You can opt for full-size entrees, or for a casual night out, hang out in the adjoining taverna and make a meal out of appetizers and a carafe of Greek wine.

"We're calling it comfort dining," says Galatis, who found his way into the restaurant business through serendipity. Years ago, he stopped at Paolo's for dinner. At the end of the meal, a waiter brought over a calabrese pizzetta (a type of savory sweet roll) compliments of the chef. Surprised by such a hospitable gesture, Galatis asked the waiter if the chef happened to be Greek. When he was told yes, Galatis excitedly asked to meet Delios. The two quickly discovered a shared dream of opening a Greek restaurant and the very next day began planning Meze along with third co-owner Chuck Samiotes. Their restaurant reaches new heights of philoxenia (that's Greek for hospitality). 100 City Square, Charlestown (617-242-6393).

CENTER STAGE

Anyone who's sold a car is probably familiar with detailing, in which a car is given a wax job and thorough cleaning to maximize its selling price. Lisa Kunzig, founder of a company called ZigZag, advocates a similar process when selling a home: staging.

Kunzig says staging is like getting your home ready for a big, impress-the-guests party, and in fact ZigZag began as a party-planning firm until staging snowballed to become its primary business. "You stage to sell, not to live," she says. "You want to create an environment that will appeal to the widest possible audience." Making a home more attractive to potential buyers can mean everything from rearranging furniture to knocking out walls and expanding windows. At a recent job on a $2.7-million home in Newton, Kunzig went in search of rugs, urns and other antiques for a thorough redecoration.

Effective staging is often the result of applying a fresh eye to a home, says Kunzig. "You spend $5,000 to chop down some trees, and all of a sudden you can see Boston," she says. "I don't chop down trees, but I can tell you if you should do it."

HUBBY HUNTING

There's an epidemic sweeping the country, and no doctor can stop it. No, it's not the Sobig virus, but the increasing number of unmarried women over the age of 35. Rachel Greenwald is on the case, armed with her Harvard M.B.A. Her new self-help guide, Find a Husband After 35: Using What I Learned at Harvard Business School (Ballantine Books), is a 15-step action plan designed to help would-be brides land a man based on marketing strategies normally reserved for alcoholic beverages and sports gear. Happily married to a man she met in Boston, Greenwald has been sending women down the aisle through her course at Colorado Free University and her private practice for years. She took a few minutes to chat about her book before it hits shelves Sept. 16.

IB: Why did you write the book?

RG: About five years ago, I had a 41-year-old friend who was single and fabulous in every way, who couldn't find a guy. And I just started advising her casually, like 'You really need to stand out. You really need a brand.' I was a marketing consultant, so I started advising her with marketing strategies. She ended up getting married within a year. I started getting lots of phone calls from women and I started a private client business.

IB: Did you follow your 15-step plan, including stuff like setting up a separate "husband search" bank account for makeup and weight-loss programs and things like that, to meet your husband?

RG: Eleven years ago I didn't have the terminology that I have now. I can't honestly say that I set up a separate bank account and gave it a label. What I did was prioritize my spending. If I had $100 and I was trying to decide between a new jacket or a ticket to a fund-raiser where I thought a lot of interesting people would be, I would choose the ticket.

IB: What are some of your more unconventional tips?

RG: One tip might to be to cancel your newspaper subscription and buy it at the newsstand and read it in public at Starbucks. Anything that keeps you in your home, get rid of. Turn everyday errands into strategic moves. If your car breaks down, and you have to take it to the shop, bring a magazine and sit in the lobby for an hour just to see who passes through.

IB: Why 35?

RG: Around the age of 35 there's a shift in your marriage priority. It's more urgent and usually it's triggered by a milestone birthday, a wedding or seeing a sign of aging on your face or body.

IB: Do you think 10 or 15 years ago, your focus would have been finding a husband after 30?

RG: I do think the age is getting later. My book is being published abroad under the title Find a Husband After 30. They're behind on trends.

IB: What's the biggest mistake someone in this age bracket makes?

RG: To narrow down the market segment that they're focused on: Mr. Right has to be six feet tall, successful, same religion... Step 4 [of my plan] is crucial: market expansion.

IB: Did you find the dating pool in Boston to be slim pickings?

RG: When I was in Boston I was in my 20s, and I thought it was bountiful. Today I have many friends in Boston, and they tell me it is very difficult to find a great guy in their 30s, 40s and 50s. But the three cities I hear complaints about most ardently are New York, Washington, D.C., and San Francisco.

IB: Do you have a money-back guarantee?

RG: I've just had so much success, that it hasn't occurred to me. It's almost impossible for me to imagine that if someone followed these steps to the letter that they wouldn't be able to find someone within 12 to 18 months.—Jessica Iredale

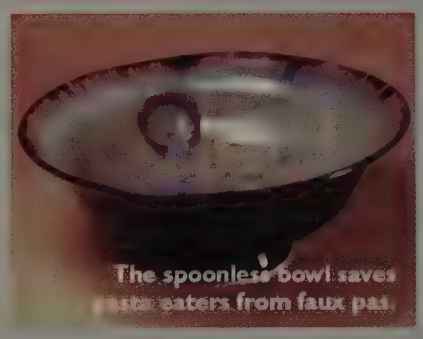
PROPER PASTA



The spoonless bowl saves pasta eaters from faux pas.

Spooning Prohibited...According to some sources in Italy, twirling pasta with a spoon ranks among obesity and chronic baseball hat wearing as a widely mocked American habit. In an attempt to bridge the gap between refined European culture and Yankee ways, Andy Howarth of the South End art studio Claygo has designed a spoonless pasta bowl. Inspired by his stint creating kitchenware for the Italian Culinary Institute of New York, Howarth's patented bowl features a small well within the interior (kind of a built-in spoon) to aid the twirling process. The spoonless wonder makes its debut Sept. 13 and 14 during the South End Open Studios, followed by a test-run with Bill Bradley's pasta at Rustic Kitchen.

Toast of the Town...Somerville's Union Square gets a little more momentum in its upswing with the opening of Toast Lounge in late September. Ken Kelly, owner of the Independent, and Judy Pagano, former GM of Axis, are teaming up to revamp the space formerly occupied by Rauxa and most recently by Macondo. The finished product will feature a funky lounge with two bars, a DJ booth and a dance floor. If it has the same charisma as its nearby sister bar, expect delish cuisine from the all-appetizer menu and a laid-back vibe. 70 Union Square, Somerville (617-571-9958).

Silver Slivers...Boston's never-ending Kennedy obsession continues with the upcoming 50th anniversary of the JFK-Jackie nuptials Sept. 12. Camelot devotees can literally get a taste of the wedding thanks to the John F. Kennedy Library and Museum and Gourmet Caterers, who are serving up 500 pieces of cake to ticketed museum visitors on the blessed day. A nonedible replica of the five-tiered white cake with buttercream frosting makes a one-day-only cameo in the anniversary exhibition, alongside the fabled 7.84-carat engagement ring and taffeta dress. The rest of the wedding exhibition displays through Oct. 31.

Grapes of Pleasure...Once again, Saint has cornered the market on a hot new cocktail. The chic club premiered Cîroc Snap Frost Vodka, the only vodka distilled from grapes, at a swanky private launch party Aug. 20. Cîroc is cultivated from French grapes that have been left on the vine past the first frost. The overripe bunches are pressed and cold-fermented and then distilled five times (as opposed to the more run-of-the-mill, thrice-distilled wheat and potato vodkas) to produce a smooth, crisp flavor. FALL CLEANING

Now's the perfect time to bring out your fall wardrobe from last year and freshen it up a bit before stores are fully stocked with their fall clothing lines. Here's my system: I sort through my clothes and accessories and decide what goes to charity. Then I try on the remainder of the clothes and decide if I want to alter any of them to make them more current. Mini-dresses and knee-length pencil skirts are trendy this season, so I'll take most of my dresses and skirts to the tailor to either shorten them, make them narrower or add a little bit more fabric to the bottom. Blouses are more tailored this year, so I'll have them taken in. All of my shoes will get new heels and a shine. Doing all of this a month or so beforehand also gives you an idea of what new items you might need and helps you develop a well-rounded wardrobe that isn't based on impulse buying. By the time the cooler weather comes along, you can look as though you have a whole new wardrobe.

SEEN, OVERHEARD OR OTHERWISE BROUGHT TO OUR ATTENTION

Sex, Bi-Coastal...Ever wonder how our notoriously buttoned-up city stacks up against free-to-be L.A. in the sex department? Brookline erotic boutique Grand Opening! opened a Santa Monica location this past April, and proprietrix Kim Airs dished the dirt on sex trends both here and there. According to Airs, her clientele are comparable age-wise, and the best-sellers are the same East and West. But, she says, "It seems that people know a little more about toys [in L.A.]." Yawn. So what does L.A. have that Boston doesn't? Swingers. "They're everywhere," says Airs. "It's definitely a cultural thing." But the West doesn't out-lib Boston in all things alternative: Airs says there's much more of a lesbian scene here, though it remains slightly underground. Catch Airs on an HBO special, Real Sex Presents: Porn 101, XXXtra Credit, Sept. 13 at 10:30 pm.

Almost Famous...Tune into ABC's new sitcom, It's All Relative, set to debut Oct. 1, and you may see a familiar sight—in addition to its star, Boston thoroughbred Lenny Clarke. Faneuil Hall's Green Dragon Tavern beat out 200 local Irish pubs to represent the bar owned by Clarke's character in the show, the backdrop for much of the action. A panel from Paramount Pictures chose the Green Dragon for its "charm and authenticity." The camera crew filmed some exterior shots for a few days in August, and depending on series development, the lights, cameras and action may return. Could it be the next Cheers?

Riding the Wave...Lately it seems yoga has become the Ashton and Demi of exercise—way overpublicized and a little weird. The latest yoga trend fits the bill: the Big O yoga workshop at Newbury Street's new Dancing Shiva Yoga Studio. The Big O aims to balance mind, body and libido. Studio owner and instructor Claudette Moussa came up with the concept while talking with male friends about tantric yoga and their sexual endurance—or lack thereof. The Big O workshop (for both men and women) features exercises and postures that strengthen the pelvic area, plus breathing techniques. According to Moussa, breathing exercises are crucial for a longer orgasm: "Imagine there is a wave and you want to go over the top without crashing down." The workshop begins Sept. 13 and includes four 90-minute sessions. 297 Newbury St., Boston (617-266-0770). www.dancingshivayogacom.

Urban Round Table...City dwellers ages 20 to 34 are invited to voice their opinions for Mayor Menino and the Boston Redevelopment Authority's A Better Boston for You study. The program hopes to get 1,000 to 3,000 participants to fill out questionnaires on the positives and negatives of living in Boston and what they would like to see in the future. Duh. How about 4 am last call for bars, rent control and expanded late-night public transportation for starters? A spokesperson for the BRA was a little vague on what the agency hopes to accomplish with the survey, but references to "consumers," "spending power," and "growth tip of the economy" make us think that it's mainly about the city's business environment. Log onto www.abetterbostonforyou.org to sound off.

Shudoh Tang Clan...When Boston Breakers star Angela Hucles takes to the turf in the Women's World Cup this fall, she'll be kickin' it with a pair of Puma cleats specially designed to commemorate the WWC. Called the Shudoh Tang, the shoe was designed in collaboration with Chinese apparel retailer Shanghai Tang and sports an Asian-influenced design (recall that prior to the SARS outbreak the WWC was scheduled to be played in China). Puma is also producing a street shoe of the same design (minus the cleats) that hits stores Sept. 18. But if you want a pair of the streetwise Shudoh Tangs, you'll have to be quick on your feet—only 888 pairs will be sold worldwide.—E.D., E.H., J.I. and J.S.

BURGLAR KING

Thou shalt not steal, except change, which is fine.

I've written before about how loath I am to part with my spare change. I love my change all out of proportion to its monetary value. O noble quarter! Giver of clean laundry and lifeblood of parking meters! O dimes, nickels and pennies, fodder for a future Coinstar check! I even love 50-cent pieces and Canadian money, those ostracized bastards of the coin community. Thus I find it extremely upsetting that someone keeps kicking in the door to my apartment and stealing my change.

That's right, I have a change thief. The first time this happened, I came home to find my apartment door forced open, the frame in splinters. I feared the worst, but the PlayStation was still there, thank God. A quick spin around the apartment confirmed that nothing seemed to be missing—nothing, that is, except my cache of hard-earned change, which had resided in a bowl atop my dresser. The bowl was still there, but it was denuded of its shiny bounty. I threw my hands toward the heavens, sank to my knees and bellowed "Noooooooooo!" It had taken me a long time to fill that bowl. Like the accumulation of nutrient-rich sediment that formed the Nile delta, it was a long and beautiful process. How many times had I said, "Sorry, don't have any," when bums had asked for that change? How many coffee-shop tip jars had gone unfilled? My unborn childrens' college fund was reset to zero. My laundry would wait another month.

Roommates Scott and Lance took stock of their belongings and found similar scenarios. Still, we thought it necessary to file a police report, and in short order a Boston cop was in our apartment surveying the damage. He told us we were lucky that we hadn't been burglarized sooner, since our door is so flimsy that a determined toddler could break into our apartment with a Fisher-Price My First Crowbar. We resolved to bulk up security, and to that end had a metal plate installed where the doorknob engages the frame. Total Panic Room, yo.

After a few weeks I forgot about our unwanted visitor and began happily restocking my change bowl. It was just starting to return to respectable levels when I came home to find the door kicked in once again, our metal door-frame sheath popped out of the frame with apparent ease. I went straight to my room and found my coin collection pillaged anew.

While my serial change plunderer once again made off with every penny, I was more perplexed at what he didn't steal, given that he'd just cased the joint a few weeks earlier: the TV, the surround-sound system, my "Take me drunk, I'm home" T-shirt, Lance's air purifier, Lance, a Tiffany money clip, Scott's old laptop computer or the spare keys to the apartment. Granted, I suppose staggering down the street with a 32-inch TV on your back would be a bit conspicuous, but he didn't even bother to grab a DVD or two while he was visiting. Is it that hard to fence a Jumanji DVD? OK, bad example.

I became quite dismayed after this second break-in. Despite the fact that I'd been relieved of only about $30, it's unsettling to know that your apartment enjoys less security than a Mariah Carey CD at Sam Goody. If it happened twice, it would probably happen again, and I was powerless to prevent it. Maybe I could just place my change bowl in the hallway outside our door, with a note saying, "If you are in this hallway and thinking about kicking in this door to steal some change, please help yourself. No need to get all crazy." Or maybe I could hire a neighborhood boy to live in my apartment when I'm not home and thwart the thief with clever and hilarious booby traps. Or maybe the best solution is one that will soon come to pass: moving to a whole new apartment.

Yep, Scott and I are movin' on up, and Lance is inheriting our apartment. Unfortunately for Lance and the two roommates he's lined up, nearly every item in the apartment belongs to Scott or me: the couch, the TV, the stereo and DVD player, the kitchen chairs; the coffee table, microwave, Foreman Grill and toaster oven, the coffeemaker, and all the pots and pans, dishes and silverware. We don't want to yank the rug out from under him, but we probably will since we're taking that too.

If our thieving friend visits again, all he'll likely find is Lance, sitting on the floor eating beef jerky and listening to his clock-radio. And that will not quite be the change he was looking for. IB

GRANT LLEWELLYN

BY JONATHAN SOROFF

Music director of the Handel and Haydn Society (America's longest continually performing musical group), Grant Llewellyn, 42, was born in Tenby, South Wales, and began cello lessons at the age of 9. He began his formal musical training at the Chethams School of Music and continued his cello studies in Italy. After attending Cambridge University, where he was a choral scholar, he studied conducting at the Royal College of Music. He won a conducting fellowship to Tanglewood in 1985, where he worked with the likes of Leonard Bernstein, Andre Previn, Kurt Masur, and Seiji Ozawa. In 1990, he was appointed assistant music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, leading the symphony at Tanglewood and Symphony Hall, and he made his Pops debut in 1992. He has served as associate guest conductor of the BBC National Orchestra of Wales and principal guest conductor of the Royal Flanders Philharmonic, and he became head of the Handel and Haydn Society in 2000. He lives in Wales with his wife, Charlotte, and their four children.

Jonathan Soroff: Handel and Haydn is the oldest continually performing musical group in America. How does that affect your job responsibilities?

Grant Llewellyn: We've been performing since 1815, and we're very proud of that. I don't know whether it really impinges on the job, except that there's a serious element of permanence, and I guess you approach it with care and attention and a view to a long future. That's in the back of my mind when I come up with some of my crazy schemes, which look as though they might bankrupt the society. There's an added responsibility with something of such standing and longevity.

JS: How dedicated are you to historically accurate performances?

GL: That's a relatively recent addition to the society's mission statement, if you will—it's only since Christopher Hogwood arrived that the society pledged itself to playing on period instruments. I personally don't feel the need to fly that flag with quite the same zeal as pioneers like him do, but I'm absolutely, 100 percent pledged to the continued exploration of period instruments and playing techniques.

JS: So would you arm-wrestle Keith Lockhart?

GL: I reckon I could probably give him a run for his money.

JS: Toughest thing about conducting?

GL: The realization that you never, ever quite realize what you had in mind. But that's also kind of liberating too, the fact that live music-making is far from a perfect science. I suspect that's why performers always go back to the same repertoire.

> VERY FEW [GOOD CONDUCTORS] DON'T HAVE A DOSE OF ARROGANCE, BUT THE VERY BEST ALL HAVE A SENSE OF HUMILITY.

JS: Do you make funny faces while you conduct?

GL: Not consciously, but my family tell me I'm a great embarrassment to them. I played piano at my son's end-of-term concert to accompany people, and afterward, he told me all his stickball and rugby-playing friends were wetting themselves over the various gestures I made. So thank God I can't see myself.

JS: Is conducting a good physical workout?

GL: It is, but I'm fortunate in that I enjoy that. I play soccer as often as I can, and I swim, and I run, so I'm not straining to get through performances. But, yeah, it's an aerobic workout, especially if we're doing a long oratorio. That's a strenuous two or three hours. So on performance days you won't find me in the gym.

JS: Are you a soccer hooligan?

GL: Most certainly not. Although I am known for getting into some close encounters on the pitch. When I'm playing, I can get quite excited with a referee.

JS: Most unconventional use you ever found for a baton?

GL: There was a conducting seminar I went to once with the BBC up in Manchester. I was with a great friend, another conductor, and after all the students had gone to bed, we found ourselves left in the student union bar, which was closed. To our dismay, they had a metal grille over the drinks cabinet, but about whatever time in the morning it was, I found that if I held my baton right, the cork handle was just long enough to work the bottles of spirits toward me and tip up against the grill sufficiently that we had a helluva night. I'm afraid we made a bit of a mess, though.

JS: One quality of a good conductor?

GL: My first instinct is to say arrogance, but then I thought it should be humility. Oddly, it's probably a combination of the two. Very few of us don't have a dose of arrogance, but the very best all have a sense of humility.

JS: Any superstitions before performing?

GL: Not really. Things go differently every night, no matter what I had for breakfast, and I think I'm far too chaotic to have any kind of rituals.

JS: One composer from history you'd most like to meet?

GL: I think I'd have got on pretty well with Wolfgang Amadeus, both on and off the football pitch.

JS: Thing you most like to conduct?

GL: Whatever I'm conducting next.

JS: Musical guilty pleasures—Abba? The Carpenters? Metallica?

GL: I did have a soft spot for Barry White in my youth.

JS: May he rest in peace. What are your kids listening to?

GL: Whoever is the latest young sensation whose name I can't pronounce. My teenage daughters are furiously trying to force me into the 21st century, usually in the car, and I think my attention's been drawn from the road once or twice, but never get as far as identifying who thes people are. We do have some great band in Wales, though. Catatonia. The Mani Street Preachers. They're hugely talented original and creative. But in general, it hard to find time outside of work to liste to music.

JS: So there's something in Wales besides sheep?

GL: Well, I just spent the afternoon on on of the most gorgeous beaches in the mids of one of the most fantastic coastlines i the world, which is about 100 yards fro where I was born.

JS: How about the Welsh language? Every time I see it written I think you people need t go on Wheel of Fortune and buy yourselves some vowels.

GL: It's called Celtic, and it's one of th oldest Indo-European languages.

JS: Favorite thing about Boston?

GL: The sights of the city are just uniquel beautiful. It's a fantastic city visually.

JS: Who was a better composer—Handel or Haydn?

GL: [Laughs.] That's impossible. They en joyed such different circumstances. Bot were brilliantly eclectic, fantastically ver satile and wrote in every idiom of their ag although I suspect that Handel was th more proficient performer, so maybe th more complete musician in that sens whereas Haydn was a little more remote.

JS: What current pop music will H&H be performing 180 years from now—Burt Bacharach? The Beatles?

GL: You mean what will stand the test o time? Undoubtedly, the Beatles. Elvis. Ob viously, Barry White. [Laughs.]

JS: Last question: When no one's looking, d you ever play air guitar?

GL: I don't care if they're looking. I'm great on air guitar.

BOSTON'S CONSERVATORIES OFFER GREAT FREE MUSIC—LOTS OF IT

BY KEITH POWERS

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY

n a list of the things that make Boston such a culturally rich city, classical music is near the top. With one of the greatest orchestras in the world, an international reputation as a center for early music, and a horde of excellent chamber ensembles and soloists that call the city home, music forms the backbone of Boston's cultural life.

So it's no surprise that the city is one of the premier training grounds for young musicians. With three classically oriented conservatories, along with outstanding music programs at many other area universities, the city teems with students carrying those oddly shaped cases. The good news for music lovers is that those schools offer thousands of concerts a year. Although the programming is designed to serve the students, performances are open the public and are often free. If you'd like to hear something other than Jewel or Linkin Park on occasion, there are options any given week.

Start with the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston's largest school for classical music, situated around the corner from Symphony Hall on Huntington Avenue. The NEC was founded in 1867 and is the only music school in America designated as a National Historic Landmark. With more than 1,000 faculty and students to draw from, the NEC offers more than 600 events each year. Beginning in October, the school's magnificent Jordan Hall hosts faculty (and friends) chamber recitals the first Monday of the month. It's worth going just for a peek at the venue's ornate decor. The cognoscenti sit upstairs for a good view and impeccable acoustics. Also in October, the NEC celebrates Jordan Hall's centennial with a weekend-long series of concerts, lectures and other musical happenings. (For more details on the upcoming shows mentioned here, see sidebar on page 24.)

Just up the street from the NEC, on the Fenway, the Boston Conservatory develops musicians of a different stripe. The Boston Conservatory offers training in theater, dance and music, and is a prime training ground for Broadway types. The major student theater presentations happen in the spring (it takes time to rehearse), but this fall you can still hear free concerts by the Wind Ensemble, conducted by William Drury (Oct. 10 and Dec. 11), and the Conservatory's elite Piano Masters series (Oct. 7 and 28 and Dec. 2), as well as the Funk Project (Sept. 19), a performance featuring the Percussion Ensemble.

Across the river, the Longy School of Music is a Cambridge fixture, on the other side of Cambridge Common from Harvard Square. Longy's Edward M. Pickman Concert Hall may not be the most beautiful space in the world, but it's intimate and has solid acoustics (avoid sitting underneath the overhanging balcony, though). Longy also presents hundreds of free events during the year; this school year kicks off with SeptemberFest. Later in the fall, don't miss the Gershwin celebration (Oct. 15), the excellent Longy Chamber Orchestra under the direction of Jeffrey Rink (Oct. 10 and Nov. 7) and the new-music ensemble Longitude (Nov. 11).

Of course the conservatories excel at music, but many of the area's universities offer high-quality music programs too. Boston University has a reputation for developing great singers, and opera fans shouldn't miss a chance to hear the latest phenom from the

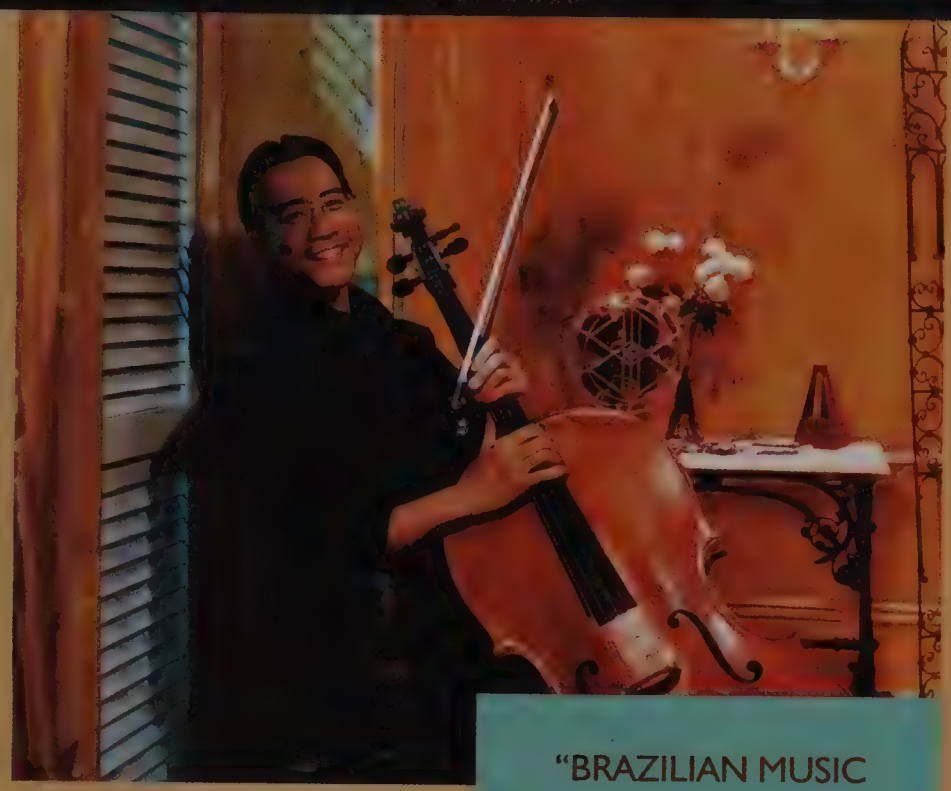
YO-YO'S WORLD MUSIC

THE CELLIST'S LATEST PROJECT TAKES HIM SOUTH OF THE BORDER

by Keith Powers



"BRAZILIAN MUSIC REACHES HIGH AND LOW. THERE'S A WAY WHERE EVERYBODY CAN PARTICIPATE, BUT AT THE SAME TIME THE MUSIC IS SOPHISTICATED."

You'd think that mastering the entire solo classical cello repertory would be enough for Yo-Yo Ma. But the 47-year-old musician, who calls Cambridge home when he isn't appearing on some far-away stage, has long been driven by even greater goals.

"Since I was 11, I wanted to learn things," Ma says. "I wanted to understand the world." So for Ma, works like his Appalachian recordings, his collaboration with Asian artists on the Silk Road Project, and his new album, Obrigado Brazil, are just natural extensions of that curiosity. "I've always been interested in Brazil," he says. "I had a radio when I was a kid, and I would listen to Brazilian stations late at night. But it's one thing to like something and another to participate. For a long time I didn't even know what questions to ask."

Ma didn't assemble just any group of collaborators for Obrigado Brazil. His all-star lineup includes Cuban clarinetist Paquito D'Rivera, percussionist Cyro Baptista, composer Egberto Gismonti and guitarists Sérgio and Odair Assad. Ma's longtime piano accompanist Kathryn Stott also sits in, as does Brazilian vocalist Rosa Passos. D'Rivera, Baptista, the Assads and Stott were among the musicians who joined Ma when he performed music from the disc at Tanglewood in August.

"Paquito I've known for 20 years," Ma says, "but I wasn't ready to work with him until now. And I've worked with the Assad brothers. But Rosa I had never heard before. I was listening to a tape with [producer] Jorge Calandrelli, and when we heard her amazing voice, we knew we had to work with her. So we wrote a letter. A couple days later someone slipped a note under my door in Cambridge—it said she would be glad to participate. It was from her brother-in-law, who lives in Newton. Sometimes you try to find out about the world, and it's essentially next door."

The arrangements on Obrigado Brazil, most by Calandrelli, put the cello front and center. But they still maintain that essential Brazilian feel, mixing rhythmic complexity with a strong undercurrent of melancholia—sad music with a groove.

"Brazilian music reaches high and low," Ma says. "There's a way where everybody can participate, but at the same time the music is sophisticated. And still it seems simple—in the same way that Mozart is simple. In some way it's an ideal of mine."

Ma admits he's not a great improviser. "I love to improvise," he says, "but it's the equivalent of singing in the shower." His collaborative partners assist in that area, however. "We help each other," he says. "Trust is the biggest factor in collaboration. You build up mutual respect so that you can take risks. We learn from each other's strengths."

For Ma, musical categories are irrelevant. "I'm not worried about genre definition," he says. "I'm interested in traditions. It's not like I live in this ghetto, and you live in that ghetto, and we should never talk. I like any music that's literate, that's complex enough for our complex world. It's not better or worse, up or down. It's appropriate. That's what I'm gunning for."

Yo-Yo Ma's next Boston performance is Jan. 6 at Symphony Hall, with members of the Silk Road Project.

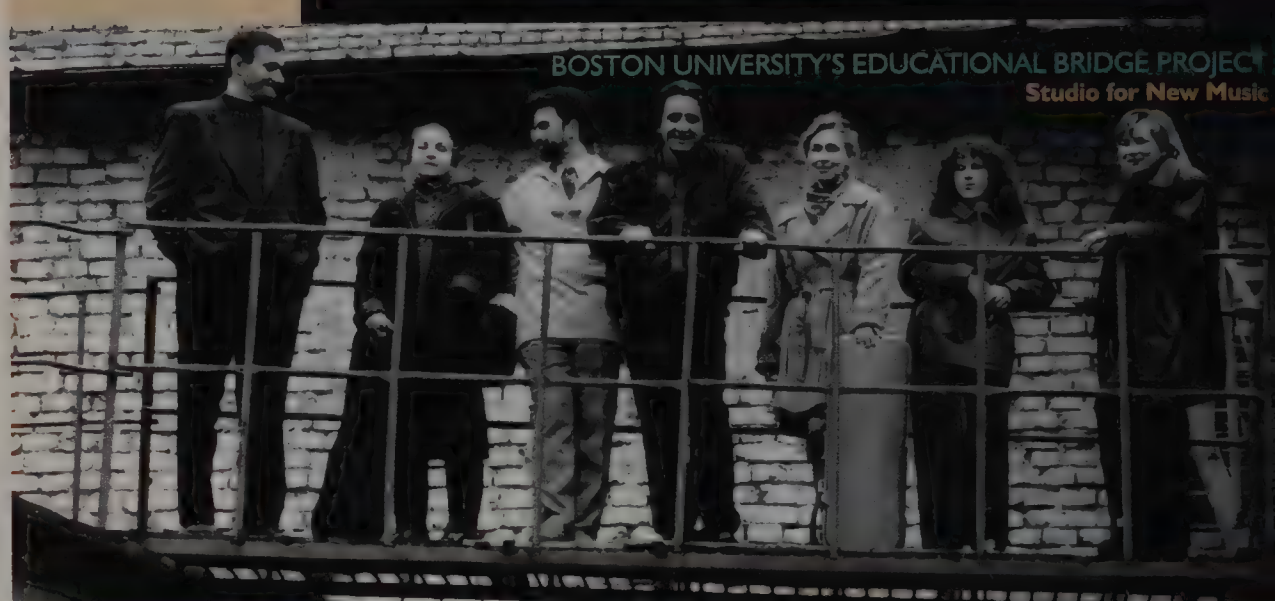
GREAT SCORES

CLASSICAL CONCERTS TO CHECK OUT THIS FALL

by Keith Powers



school's Opera Institute. The full performance schedule for this fall was not available at press time, so check www.bu.edu/cfa for details. One event to look for is the Educational Bridge Project, directed by Ludmilla Leibman of BU's music department. This annual program exchanges musicians, critics, curators, filmmakers and the like between BU and two cities in Russia—St. Petersburg and Moscow. The Russians visit in the fall, and the Bostonians travel to Russia in the spring. Each year, the exchange brings about important discussions and presentations about the state of the arts in the United States and Russia. Dozens of concerts, lectures, master classes, film presentations and meetings will take place as part of the program.

Berklee College of Music crosses all genres, but is best known as a jazz and rock institution. Its Berklee Performance Center hosts concerts by many big-name jazz and rock artists, but the school also presents numerous free student and faculty performances. Upcoming free shows include a classical recital by clarinetist Peter Cokkinias Sept. 17 and a performance by the chamber-jazz trio Tre Corda Sept. 22, both at the David Friend Recital Hall, 921 Boylston St., Boston. Call the concert hotline (617-747-8820) or visit www.berklee.edu/events for more information about fall events.

Back on the other side of the Charles, MIT's music department and its Media Lab host adventurous concerts each season. Besides MIT's quartet series, you can hear free concerts in the MIT chapel Thursdays at noon. Music ranges from Renaissance to new commissions. Wellesley College also presents lots of quality music events—and scores a big coup this September with an appearance by the early-music vocal ensemble Anonymous 4 on its farewell tour. Did we mention it's free? iB

Longy SeptemberFest

Every fall SeptemberFest brings Boston-area music lovers together again after the summer hiatus. Six concerts this year include a Piano Fest Sept. 13 (including music for piano for 12 hands—curious), a work by local composer Howard Frazin featuring soprano Jayne West Sept. 19, and the festival closer with music of Dvorak, Bill Evans, Charlie Parker and others. Edward M. Pickman Concert Hall, 27 Garden St., Cambridge (617-876-0956). www.longy.edu. MBTA: Red Line to Harvard. Sept. 12-14 and 19-21. Free.

Wellesley College Concert Series

Wellesley presents Anonymous 4, early music's greatest female ensemble, which is touring one final time before retiring. Mark the date: Sept. 21. Piano trio Triple Helix continues its Beethoven cycle Sept. 28, and pianist Judith Gordon explores works by John Harbison, with the composer providing some insights, Oct. 29. Houghton Memorial Chapel, 106 Central Ave., Wellesley (781-283-2028). www.wellesley.edu. MBTA: Framingham/Worcester Commuter Rail to Wellesley Square. Sept. 21-Dec. 11. Free.

Boston Conservatory Piano Masters

The piano faculty at Boston Conservatory, led by Michael Lewin, is second to none around town. Each year some of those faculty, as well as distinguished guests, offer recitals that present a wide variety of music. Highlights: Guest Marc-André Hamelin, who opens the series Oct. 7, and faculty member Jung-Ja Kim Dec. 2. Plus, the concerts are Tuesday evenings—so you know you're free. Seully Hall, 8 The Fenway, Boston (617-912-9222). www.bostonconservatory.edu. MBTA: Green Line to Hynes. Oct. 7-April 20. Free.

New England Conservatory's Jordan Hall Centennial Celebration

The NEC celebrates its acclaimed midsize concert hall, which opened in 1903, with a weekend-long series of events. And if you think NEC turns out only classical artists, think again. The jazz faculty ranks with the finest in the world. A concert on Friday evening features four MacArthur Fellows: Faculty members Ran Blake, Steve Lacy and George Russell and NEC alumnus Cecil Taylor are all recipients of the "genius grants." Another MacArthur Fellow, Gunther Schuller, leads the NEC student orchestra Saturday evening. Sunday festivities include children's activities, such as an "instrument petting zoo" that lets kids investigate instruments, plus choral, ragtime and philharmonic concerts. Jordan Hall, 290 Huntington Ave., Boston (617-585-1122). www.newengland conservatory. edu. MBTA: E Green Line to Symphony. Oct. 24-26. Free. (Passes, available to the public, are required for some performances.)

Boston University's Educational Bridge Project

This exchange of musicians and intelligentsia between Boston University and St. Petersburg and Moscow takes place annually. In the fall, the Russians come to BU; in the spring, BU faculty and students travel to Russia. Come to the Boston events—Russia is too far. Highlights: American and Russian Singers collaborative concert (Nov. 1), the Studio for New Music's 50 Years After Stalin's Death: The History of Russia in Sounds (Nov. 16) and Composer's Workshop (Nov. 18). Boston University College of Fine Arts Concert Hall, 855 Comm. Ave., Boston (617-353-3349). www.bu.edu. MBTA: B Green Line to BU West. Oct. 27-Nov. 18. Free.

MIT Guest Artist Series

The unheralded but top-notch MIT music department has hosted a string quartet series that has brought nearly all the great foursomes to the area over the years. This fall MIT hosts the first Boston-area appearance of the Zehetmair String Quartet, acclaimed for its recordings of contemporary music. Kresge Auditorium, 84 Mass. Ave., Cambridge (617-253-2826). www.mit.edu. MBTA: Red Line to Kendall. Nov. 22. Free.

MORE THEATER COMPANIES ARE TAKING A GAMBLE ON NEW TALENT IN THEIR FALL LINEUPS

first ACTS

BY LIZA WEISSTUCH

Playwright and actor John Kuntz is a busy man these days. You might find him at home, busily reworking a draft of his newest play or onstage in Shear Madness, which he's appeared in sporadically for three years. Kuntz, who's played roles in everything from Commonwealth Shakespeare Company's outdoor summer productions on the Common to mainstage shows at the Huntington Theatre, is now known as much for the madcap comic romps that he writes as for the characters he brings to life on stage. In fact, he's racked up such an inventory of scripts—from last year's Jump/Rope, which was produced by one of Boston's newest theater companies, Next Stages, to Starfuckers, which won "best solo show" at the New York International Fringe Festival in 2002—that Boston Theatre Works commissioned him to write a brand new holiday play for this season.
